

What Will Your Class Do?

Don't forget—FoodSpan is a customizable and cross-curricular study of food system issues. Here are some creative ways educators are using FoodSpan:

Social Studies

A History teacher in California uses Unit 1: Meet the Food System to teach her course on Ancient World History and Geography.

Photo credit: Maler der Grabkammer des Menna. Wikimedia Commons. Public domain.

STEM

An Environmental Science and Botany class in Maryland are growing their own food in a school garden after learning about pesticides and the industrialization of agriculture from the FoodSpan curriculum.

Language Arts

An English Professor in Texas integrates FoodSpan lessons on the food system into argumentative writing assignments and service-learning experiences with local community organizations.

Health

Nursing students in Maryland used FoodSpan to engage a high school health class in discussions about the causes and effects of food insecurity.

Photo credit : Bob Nichols, USDA, 2013. Some rights reserved.

Discover what the study of food can lead to—start teaching with FoodSpan today.

Start Using FoodSpan

Copyright © 2018 Center for a Livable Future, All rights reserved.

Want to change how you receive these emails?

You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.