Today is an important day.

It's Golden Sage Market's first Earth Day! And, if you're familiar with our company values, you know how big a deal that is.

One of the reasons I founded Golden Sage Market was because I feel a responsibility to our local food system. That's why we choose partners who put the earth first.

Here are a few we'd like you to get to know better.

Bread and Flours

You'll never find self-stabilizers or chemical preservatives in any of their preserves, marmalades, breads, or oils (or any of their products in non-recyclable packaging).

Futterman Farms

Dates from this 4.7-acre farm are grown using clean mulch and no man-made fertilizers, pesticides, or chemicals.

Acapico Salsa

A former farm worker, chef Luis Dirco understands the importance of ethical, earth-friendly farming. That's why he sources from local farms that use organic processes.

Find out how these and our other partners are keeping our planet beautiful in our latest Food for Thought post.
