

Win! 4x £100

QUESTION Time

The answer to each question can be found in the box at the bottom. Cross them off as you go.

- 1 What is Anne Hegerty's nickname on The Chase?
- 2 The motto 'In God We Trust' features on the coins of which country?
- 3 Who created the characters Pop and Ma Larkin?
- 4 Danny Jones, who won The Masked Singer earlier this year, is a member of which band?
- 5 How many centimetres are there in half a metre?
- 6 Mild-mannered janitor Penry Pooch is the alias of which cartoon crime fighter?
- 7 What first name connects comedians Kane and Howard?
- 8 What colour code is given to the most common type of fire extinguishers, which contain water?
- 9 What must a church contain to be formally classed as a cathedral?
- 10 Which order of animals gets its name from the Latin for 'Pouch'?
- 11 Who is Dune star Josh Brolin's very famous stepmother?
- 12 Texas Hold 'Em and 16 Carriages are the lead singles from which music star's new country-tinged album?
- 13 What colour is the rearing horse on the Ferrari logo?
- 14 Roots is a self-portrait by which Mexican artist?
- 15 What type of dairy product is Hereford Hop?
- 16 How many bottles are there in a standard case of wine?
- 17 Finn Wolfhard, Paul Rudd and Dan Aykroyd have recently reprised their roles in Frozen Empire, the latest instalment in which comedy film franchise?
- 18 What colour are the eggs of a robin?
- 19 On which of the Canary Islands are the Montañas del Fuego, or Fire Mountains, located?
- 20 According to the saying, 'Practice makes' what?

- | | | |
|----------------|--------------------|-------------------|
| ★ PERFECT | ★ 50 | ★ BISHOP'S THRONE |
| ★ CHEESE | ★ MCFLY | ★ H E BATES |
| ★ RED | ★ THE GOVERNESS | ★ BLUE |
| ★ GHOSTBUSTERS | ★ BLACK | ★ TEETH |
| ★ BEYONCE | ★ 12 | ★ RUSSELL |
| ★ HONG KONG | ★ BARBRA STREISAND | ★ USA |
| ★ PHOOEY | ★ MARSUPIAL | ★ FRIDA KAHLO |
| ★ LANZAROTE | | |

FINISHED?
One of the answers will be left over and this is the prize one. Write this answer on the entry coupon, enter online, phone or text. See page 57.

Our Lives

A brother's bond

When we received devastating news, my boy made an amazing gesture. By Rachel Woollard, 26

Milo, Zella and Sue

Zella and me

Waking up, I immediately checked on my daughter Zella, who was lying beside me. 'How's my little girl doing?' I asked softly.

Zella, one, had been struggling to sleep for the last few nights. She'd been so upset the previous night, I'd brought her into bed with me. It was so unlike her and now, when I picked her up, she looked so tired. I noticed her nappy was bone dry, too. 'Oh, sweetie, you're not doing too good,' I said.

While my hubby Ryan stayed at home with our son Milo, five, I took Zella to hospital. After tests including an ultrasound and bladder scan, a doctor asked if Ryan could join me to discuss the results and fear set in.

Something must be seriously wrong, I thought, calling Ryan.

When he arrived, we were taken into a private room. 'Your daughter has cancer,' the doctor said, gravely.

Ryan and I held hands as we struggled to take in the news.

The doctor explained that Zella had a type of cancer called neuroblastoma. The tests had shown a large tumour in her pelvic area.

'We'll need to get her into chemotherapy as soon as possible,' he told us.

Back at Zella's bedside, we stared at our baby girl in disbelief.

'She's only one, it's not fair,' I whispered.

The next day, Zella began treatment. It zapped her energy, leaving her bed-bound, and her curly golden hair fell out almost instantly.

'Her gorgeous hair,' I sobbed. 'She's so young.'

A week later, we spent Zella's second birthday in the children's ward.

She was there for four weeks with me and Ryan by her side.

At home in Ely, Cambridgeshire, my parents Sue and Carl stepped in to take care of Milo.

We knew he was worried, so we explained it as best we could.

'Your sister is poorly but she's in hospital where doctors are going to make her better,' I told him.

'Am I going to get poorly too?' Milo asked.

'No, love,' I replied. 'You've got to be her strong big brother.'

When Milo was able to visit, the doctors explained the treatment his baby sister was having and why she'd lost her hair.

'I'm going to shave my hair off too,' he said. 'So Zella doesn't feel alone.'

I laughed and said: 'If you say so.'

A month later, Zella was allowed home. We moved in with Mum for a while to make it easier for us to get Zella to her weekly check-ups and chemo sessions.

She was still fragile, but bringing her home gave us hope.

'I can't thank you enough for everything, Mum,' I said after tucking Zella into bed on her first night back.

'She's our little fighter,' Mum said, squeezing my arm.

A few weeks on, Mum told me she was going to shave her hair off to raise money for Neuroblastoma UK, so we set up a JustGiving page.

The next day, I checked the page and gasped.

'We've already raised £3000!' I told Mum.

'That's amazing!' she replied. Thanks to our friends and family, it wasn't long before we hit our £5000 target.

Soon after, Milo came into the kitchen with a big question.

'Mum, can I shave my head, please?' he asked.

When he'd said it in the hospital, I'd assumed it was a reaction to seeing Zella. But now I realised he was serious.

'Of course,' I replied, fighting back tears.

A few days later, we sat Mum and Milo down for their haircut. By now, donations had hit over £7000.

'Look at all my hair,' Milo said, giggling as clumps fell around him.

'You're so brave,' I said, kissing the top of his freshly shaved head.

But soon after, there was bad news. Zella wasn't responding well to the chemotherapy she was on and needed a more aggressive treatment.

Doctors are still hopeful it will work.

Zella also had one of her ovaries removed and cryogenically frozen, so she has a chance of having biological children in the future.

All we can do is take every day as it comes and make our little girl as comfortable as ever.

Zella is the bravest soul. Not a day goes by when she doesn't blow me away.

And I'm so proud of how mature Milo has been. He's the best big brother our Zella could ask for.

Me, Zella and Milo

Photos: Shutterstock