Van Cleef & Arpels, step aside

The 1920s was a time of gaiety. A time of dramatic changes following the end of the First World War that included speakeasies, the Charleston and a new freedom for women. One such young woman was a Manhattan lass named Millie. She smoked, she drank, she voted ... and she wasn't afraid to say exactly what was on her mind. She flattened her chest by wrapping it tightly in cloths, and one day — in a fit of utter rebellion went behind her father's back and chopped off her hair into a style coined the "bob." While the bob became all the rage, Millie became a flapper who inspired a movie.

One thing that never got boyish but did get modern was the jewelry of that time. Jewelry from the hailed Art Deco period took on an architectural appearance incorporating geometric shapes and curved arcs with many styles premiering in high-end European jewelry stores. And all the while, having an exquisite elegance unmatched by any other style.

We take you back to the flapper period with this retro-inspired Ruby Art Deco Ring. Simply stunning, it's crafted in shimmering .925 sterling silver and is the epitome of luxury with a genuine, faceted oval ruby. This rich-in-color red gem is surrounded by our exclusive, glistening DiamondAura rounds that deliver the fire of natural, gem-quality stones without the sky-high price. Once on your finger, you'll never want to take this ring off.

As F. Scott Fitzgerald put it, the ideal flapper was "lovely, expensive, and about nineteen." Ours is lovely and a steal at only $297. No need to fly to Paris to shop Van Cleef & Arpels, it's available to you today, right here at Stauer.
