

Robbie, Oliver and Wooster Loveland

Kelcie Zarle

Despite being the same breed, the Scottish terrier siblings, Robbie, Oliver and Wooster Loveland, differ in age and personality. These three musketeers all fit the classic Terrier temperament and are independent, loyal, and try to be obedient. Robbie, the oldest of the bunch, is 11-years-old and Oliver, the middle sibling, is 4. The newest member of the family, Wooster, is only 4-months-old and is as playful as a puppy can be.

Robbie, a rescue dog, was named by a foster family before the Lovelands adopted him. To differentiate him from his nearly identical siblings, he wears a red collar. When passing by the house, you can always spot Robbie looking out either the front or back window from his designated window seats. In the front of the house, he peacefully watches people and cars passing by, while in the back, he watches over those walking down the brook path. Robbie may be calm, sweet and mature but he has a few tricks up his sleeve. He can perch himself on his back feet, with his front legs dangling in front of him, like a kangaroo. He also can rollover on command when his owners give him the cue: bang.

Oliver was named after Charles Dickens' famous novel. Of the three, he is the most talkative and alert. Oliver attends obedience school in Acton and has been awarded the Canine Good Citizen award. He takes pride in this obedience training and plans on competing in an obedience competition in the near future. Oliver is always striving to earn rewards whether it be the CGC award or a treat for good behavior. At home, he enjoys playing with the various toys lying all throughout the house as well as with his siblings. He loves going on frequent walks and wears a green collar, which represents his always ready-to-go attitude.

Last but not least, Wooster is the animated and playful puppy. The Lovelands took time in naming him because they wanted to make sure they chose the perfect name to match his personality. They ended up naming him after a character in a British comedy/ play. Wooster is a true younger sibling, because he constantly nudges and annoys Robbie and Oliver. The two have warmed up to his presence and love his youthful energy. Wooster loves gnawing and teething anything that comes within range of his mouth. He already exhibits the independent spirit that his breed entails, but is constantly learning more from his brothers.

Robbie, Oliver, and Wooster are very good together and have become best of friends over the years. The three brothers often finish the day by curling up next to Mrs. Loveland while she reads or watches TV. They always keep an eye out for each other and for the wellbeing of the family. They are extremely loyal and love company and welcoming people into their home. Hopefully you get a chance to meet these three Scotties sometime soon.
