GALLERY 2: GOTTA GO, GOTTA FLOW by Michael Abramson

Michael L. Abramson [1948-2011] was an American photographer best known for his striking black and white photographs documenting the vibrant nightlife of Chicago’s South side during the mid-1970s. Their framing and mood evoke the energy and imagery captured by Brassai in Paris during the early decades of the 20th century. In addition to his South Side portfolio, Abramson also explored on Chicago’s North side, ballrooms and dance halls. Abramson’s photographs can be found in the permanent collections of the Smithsonian, the Art Institute of Chicago, the Milwaukee Art Museum, Madison Museum of Contemporary Art, and the California Museum of Photography.

GALLERY 3: LIFE-AS-IS by Lauren Withrow

Born and raised in a small farming town in Texas, Lauren Withrow began photographing at the age of 15. Now based out of LA, she focuses her work on documenting stories, places, and creating cinematic worlds that dive into personal feelings of growing up queer, expectations of womanhood, and the relationships we have with others.
