

Prescott Emergency Room Negligence Lawyer

Visiting an emergency room is one of the most stressful events a person can experience. There are many different reasons why a person might go to the emergency room. Such reasons can include life-threatening circumstances, suddenly going into labor, or dealing with severe mental disturbances. Whatever the reason, the emergency room exists to handle all types of medical issues that need immediate attention.

When the hospital system works well, patients can receive the care that they need. Unfortunately, there are instances when emergency room care is not up to par. The staff on hand might be negligent in some way, and the patient could be harmed even further as a result. At Jensen Phelan Law Firm, we understand all too well the damage that emergency room negligence can do to patients. If you're dealing with issues that resulted from emergency room negligence in Prescott, we will work hard to help you pursue the compensation you deserve.

Understanding the Definition of Emergency Room Negligence in Prescott

Emergency room negligence is defined as substandard care that was delivered to a patient during an emergency room visit and caused that patient harm. The care delivered by a doctor was below the standard care expected from other competent doctors under the same set of circumstances. Emergency rooms are notably hectic and chaotic spaces, often with many different medical emergencies going on at once. In spite of that fact, doctors, nurses, and emergency room staff are required to provide all of their patients with good care.

While there is an understanding that emergency room care may not offer the luxury of slow-paced, careful, and methodical evaluation that comes with other types of medical care, that doesn't preclude the hospital's obligation to provide good care. Hospitals are not exempt from liability if a patient is harmed due to substandard care. At Jensen Phelan Law Firm, we are emergency room negligence specialists who work hard to help our clients obtain the relief they deserve.

Types of Emergency Room Negligence in Prescott

At Jensen Phelan Law Firm, we have handled cases dealing with several different types of situations that led to cases of emergency room negligence. Some of those cases include:

Infection

Because hospital rooms have a constant flow of various people coming in and out, the chances of picking up an infection are pretty high. When doctors don't take measures to prevent the spread of germs, viruses, and bacteria, the chance of other ER patients being infected grows.

Misdiagnosis or Diagnosis Delay

When doctors are racing to treat ER patients, they often end up in situations where they misdiagnose symptoms as belonging to one illness when they actually belong to another. A misdiagnosis could put a patient's health in jeopardy, especially if the underlying condition proves to be dangerous or fatal.

There could also be a delay in diagnosis if the patient's condition is not deemed urgent when they first come into the ER. For instance, the patient could be bleeding internally, but the doctor may only note a slight fever. This could result in devastating consequences for a patient.

Medication Issues

When things are hectic in the emergency room, doctors or nurses can easily make mistakes regarding a patient's medication. Doctors may prescribe the wrong medication or the wrong amount of medication, while nurses could administer the wrong medication or incorrect dosages. These types of mistakes could be dangerous or deadly for patients.
