

Cameo: The business of fame

On the Cameo app, celebrities will do your personal bidding. Just be careful what you wish for.

by Robert Jeffery

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Published: 25 Jun 2021

Last Updated: 25 Jun 2021

Chuck Norris fixes his camera and stares straight ahead. “One time, Chris Fox tried to punch me,” draws the action movie legend, in his trademark baritone. “It felt like a cool breeze on a summer’s day. Your kids wanted to tell you you’re a great dad... Happy Father’s Day!”

Norris’s film work dried up a decade ago and his most lucrative commercial deal nowadays is with a gun manufacturer. But there is one place he finds a consistent audience – Cameo, a website that enables the public to pay for personalised messages from the great and good. And so, for £337, the star of Lone Wolf McQuade and Missing ion will toast a loved one’s birthday or commiserate a friend who’s lost their job.

Founded in 2017, Cameo has captured the zeitgeist during coronavirus as consumers, starved of real-world experiences, seek out a piece of virtual celebrity stardust. There are more than 30,000 famous faces on the platform; by mid-2020, they had recorded one million messages ranging from cheery 10-second greetings to heartfelt vocal performances.

Cameo has forged an entirely new market. Never before have you been able to request a personalised experience from your favourite star, unless you could afford the $2m Colonel Gaddafi's son Hannibal reportedly paid for Beyonce to sing her greatest hits at his Caribbean New Year's Eve party in 2009.

In the process, it has stripped back the final remaining veneer of celebrity, making plain once and for all that while there will always be refuseniks for whom the illusion of otherness is everything, most famous faces have their price – from £1,875 for a clip of Caitlyn Jenner to 75p for a chat with the writer of the new Tom and Jerry movie.

Inevitably, there is an undignified quality to watching once-venerated heroes perform for small change. It's not surprising Hollywood C-lister Gary Busey is supplementing his income by reprising his role as a Lethal Weapon villain. But does Richard Dreyfuss, one of the most accomplished actors of his generation, really need £750 to tell someone's husband to stay out of the water? How does John Cleese feel reading out his fans' barely intelligible poetry for cash?

The individual economics at play are equally baffling. Rebecca Black was briefly famous for recording an irredeemably awful song (Friday) as a 13-year-old, which she will now strum along to in a video message for £375 – the same amount for which disco legend Gloria Gaynor will perform a personal rendition of I Will Survive. Naomi Klein may have christened the era of disaster capitalism, but on Cameo irony capitalism is the only currency that counts.

The people who are doing best of all, of course, are Cameo's three co-founders, Steven Galanis, Martin Blencowe and Devon Spinnler Townsend, who take a 25% cut of each video. The company's most recent funding round saw it valued at $1bn and it has spawned a trail of imitators, among them myfanpark and the UK-based Memmo.

It has also exposed just how brutal the business of making fame pay has become. Writing a solitary hit single used to be a ticket to financial comfort (famously, Katrina and the Waves's Kimberley Rew could count on $1m per year in licensing for Walking on Sunshine, her band's solitary smash). Today, streaming has fragmented revenues so drastically that even the biggest acts have to tour religiously to build their fortunes, and those with alimonies and entourages are forced to offer exclusive “experiences” to premiumise gig-going.

The earning potential of reality stars, meanwhile, begins to wane the second the cameras stop rolling. The multi-decade reinventions of Sir Cliff Richard and Cilla Black seem a distant memory. So perhaps we can forgive Cameo, this strange internet hinterland where Herr Flick from Allo' Allo' rubs shoulders with Martin from Homes Under The Hammer (“big pat on the back to the whole team at Pendleton’s Estate Management”) and where you can choose between Basil Brush and Sarah Palin to spice up your bar mitzvah.

And some celebrities have clearly uncovered an entrepreneurial streak. The most profitable British star on Cameo is James Buckley, who played Jay in The Inbetweeners. The Guardian estimates he made £300,000 last year from thousands of £40 videos, his most popular request being to call a recipient a “briefcase wanker”. It’s probably not what Andy Warhol envisaged 15 minutes of fame would look like, but we’ve all got to make a living.
