We live in a hyper-connected world where data flows and resources are shared

We live in a different era

In the past 3 years more than 40.000 stores
have closed their doors

Thousand more closed due to COVID-19

However some retailers have been able to adapt and thrive during this same time period

Wolf & Badger
$21M
annual revenue

Neighborhood Goods
$10M
annual revenue

Dover Street Market
$42.9M
annual revenue

So, what is the common thread?

We are flipping the model by putting the consumer at the center

Wholesale: Transaction based model

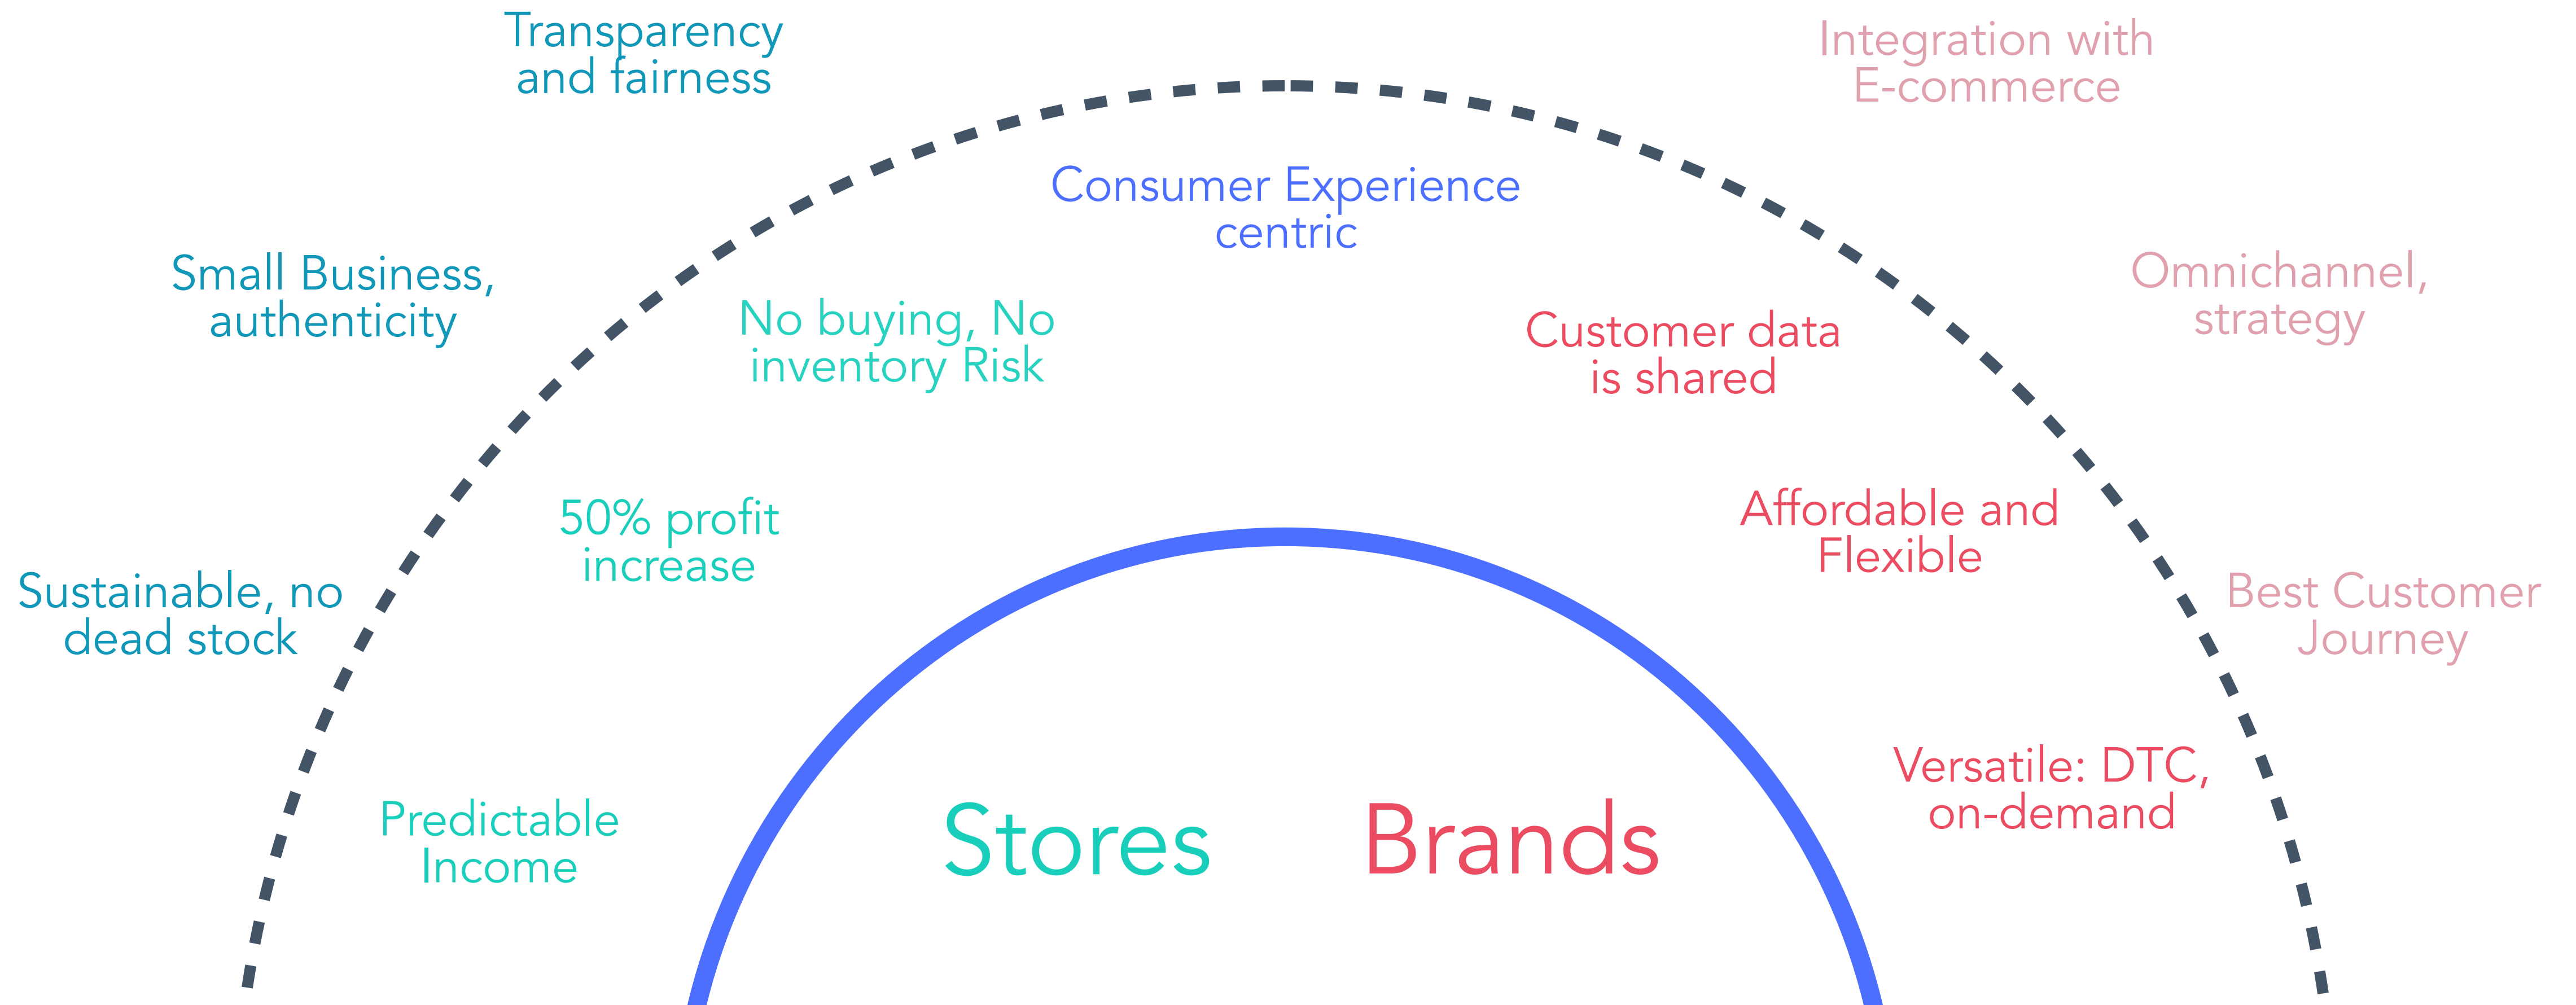

Wholesale creates a disconnect between Brands, Stores and Consumers, where sales and data are lost and online strategies play no role.

Co-Retail: Partnership based model

Co-retailing puts the consumer at the center of a Brand-Store collaboration that enhances the free flow of data and supports online sales.

The future of retail: From purchasing inventory to partnering with brands

What our community is saying

“Working with vendors is a very manual process; we are using Pivot to find more brands and automatize the whole process”

Savannah Barkley, Bloom Collective

“Pivot can help us solve the messiness of wholesale as a store. We are placing our entire store on Pivot.”

Marie Anne, Miljours Studio

“Buying inventory is a thing of the past, the collaboration approach has completely changed my store”

Pedro Roa, Wynwood Tribe

PIVOT

Miami

PIVOT

Nomad Tribe, a small chain of successful boutiques located in Miami, with stores in Wynwood and Miami Beach.

Nomad Tribe curated sustainable and socially conscious brands from all over the world. In store events and pop-ups were a regular at both locations as a way to build our community and delight their customers.

Sales started to drop due to changes in consumer behavior choosing online over in-store purchases.

Nomad Tribe invited its vendors to Co-retail with them and created a sustainable hub in Miami allowing brands to not only gather customer data but throw regular events attracting new customers.

What's the secret sauce?

- Get rid of COGS.
- From Sales as income to Fees as income
- Charge a premium to brands in exchange for customer acquisition, consumer education, customer feedback and data.
- Brands handle and own the discounts.
- Results in data and a marketing budget to increase sales.
