If you want to make your kitchen even more visually interesting, consider choosing darker colours for your cabinets, countertops, and backsplashes. They enhance the overall look of your kitchen, and balance out well with lighter wall colours.

A Great Choice of Paint Colour for Small Kitchen with Dark Cabinets

Dark cabinets often look beautiful and elegant, but they need to be matched well with good paint colours to truly bring a shine to your cooking area. However, too many dark colours can make the kitchen space feel gloomy, so it is important to ensure your colours are balanced well.

1. Complementary Colours:

Patterns are the best way if you want to make your small kitchen wall more visually interesting. It's also a great way to break up the space, if your walls look too empty.

Tips for Choosing Small Kitchen Paint Colours

Before committing to your choice of colour for your walls, there are a few more things to consider. Factors like lighting and existing furniture play an important role in deciding your colours, and not considering them can make you regret your decision later on. Here are some of the factors you need to keep in mind:

1. Lighting and Size:

Not all kitchens are the same, and your layout must factor in making your decision. Same goes for natural light: how much natural light does it get, and at what time of the day? That changes how the colours look. For e.g. Morning light will intensify colours, while afternoon lights will soften them.

2. Existing furniture and décor:
