ABOUT

Richard Holeton is a writer, consultant, and Assistant Vice Provost for Learning Environments, Emeritus, at Stanford University, following a 30-year career as an educator and academic technology leader. Previously he served as Senior Director of Learning Environments, Director of Academic Computing Services, and as a lecturer for 12 years in Stanford's English department and writing program, where he helped pioneer digital and networked pedagogies and the design of technology-rich learning spaces. His creative work includes the critically-recognized cult classic hypertext novel Figurski at Findhorn on Acid, other widely exhibited multimedia and electronic literature, and award-winning short stories. Writing honors include fellowships from MacDowell, the National Endowment for the Arts, Dora Maar House, and the California Arts Council. As a scholar he's published research and book chapters, authored trailblazing college writing textbooks on multicultural and information age themes, and co-authored the widely-used Learning Space Rating System from EDUCAUSE.
