Features: An evening with Johnnie Walker Blue Label's latest Ghost and Rare bottling

By Yeo Yong Hao, Editor-in-Chief

Source: Diageo

In October, Masked Scotch whisky brand Johnnie Walker released the fourth release in its Blue Label's Ghost and Rare line of limited edition bottlings. Dubbed Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Port Ruighaidh, the limited release pays homage to Scotland's now-defunct whisky at the Invergordon.

Nonetheless, this particular expression would arrive in Singapore's duties only in early-December. To mark its release, Johnnie Walker held a tasting and dégustation dinner at Cyclo Restaurant, a modern Vietnamese restaurant. To prevent scores on tasting, we only covered a select few bottlings from the event.

Plus, it wasn't everyday that I got to see the 'Cocktail Chef' shoo cooks being mocked. Here's what went down after I got tossed out.

On arrival

Cyclo is conveniently located next to the exuberant w Hi in Paire Renaissance, so there's no need to look around for shopping-mall masks and cement. It's an intimate place through and through, with dozen sections to steak a chef's table, main dining area and private dining rooms.

Caught this with the current capacity restrictions for F&B establishments in Singapore. Guests were seated in the main dining area, which was fine by me as I got to see what the chef's table and most cutes a glass of Johnnie Walker Blue Label at a welcome drink, because what else would be appropriate this evening?

Hmmmm, the Ghost and Rare Peterseyk would have to wait.

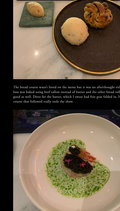
Before we tucked the Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk up against the number of Blue Label bottlings, the first course was served to get our palate going. Aptly labelled 'Smoke', the trio of small bites was the contrast of the following:

1. Caviar Bak Innovate tapioc: Deep-fried pastry shell filled with caviar Sterlin and Mascarpone cheese, topped with caviar
2. Brioche Toast wit Apple: Brioche toast topped with Royal Oscietra caviar and chilli
3. Tomato Macaron Delic: Macaron half topped with raw and Osetra Oscietra caviar

There was no need for the blinis, egg whites, egg yolks, and dices that traditionally accompany caviar. This wonderful kitchen can't-convention, and the absence of a division from the ones first course, which would go on to set the tone for the rest of the evening.

However, the caviar's focus was the whisky, which is exactly where we wanted our attention to before the bread course was served.

Comparing two Blue Label expressions



Principal Trainer of The Beverage Chaser, Sean Ooi, would be guiding attendees through the session. He's trained and honest of the Johnnie Walker brand we got to know before diving into a comparison between the two expressions. We started with the Blue Label first as the baseline whisky before tasting the Ghost and Rare Peterseyk.

On the surface, this is Blossom on stones. Johnnie Walker Blue Label is 43% ABV, presented in a 750ml bottle, and retails for around $350. It's a blend of 15 to 18 whiskies, and how exactly it's always added. Flamenco Sole under the brand and you'll find this Johnnie Walker is home to differentiate these two expressions.

You need only look at the official tasting notes of the two expressions to find out.

Johnnie Walker Blue Label

Nose: Wonderfully mellow and gentle with delicate smoke. Ambrosia softly mixed with the sweetness of raisins.

Palate: A velvety combination of vanilla, honey, and rose petals. Then, it broadens out to reveal a delicious orange flavour with notes of hazelnut, dates, and dark chocolate.

Finish: Rich and heartwarmly long. It showcases Johnnie Walker's trademark smokiness in the most sophisticated way.

Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk

Nose: Sweet, with a touch of smoke. Reminiscent of the aromas and flavours of Peterseyk, like the sweetness of malt fruits and honeydew.

Palate: Gentle butterscotch, nutmeg, stewed fruits, and a dash of cinnamon

Finish: Beautifully balanced with the delicate subtle sweetness of honeycomb and soft smokiness.

Although Johnnie Walker is blatantly signposting what it comes to the companion whisky of its expressions, they do give a few clues away here and there. For the regular Blue Label bottling, there's whisky from the Clynelish, Cardhu, Braeisoun, and Caol Ila distilleries in there, amongst other distilleries in Diageo's portfolio.

The Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk has different recipe that champions Peterseyk's whisky from the Port Ruighaidh distillery, which closed in 1983 and is located in Leith, Cambridge. Johnnie Walker would also seek whisky from the Glenkinchie, Auchroisk, Craigganmore, Strathmill, and Royal Lochnagar distilleries are used too.

On paper, this leads to one very different blended Scotch whisky. However, here's my set of personal tasting notes, which I wrote down after the dégustation dinner:

Johnnie Walker Blue Label

On the nose, it's very pretty, but heavy, initially. Lots of vanilla, honey, and spices present. On the palate, it's very with a touch of smoke. The sweetness really comes through after a few sips and a bout. The finish is dense, with whispers of smoke.

Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk

On the nose, there's the sweetness of fresh fruits and a touch of fresh cut grass. The palate is creamy at the regular Blue Label, but more full-bodied. There's a touch of smoke here as well, but it's more subtle than the regular Blue Label. The finish is more lingering, and is where the Peat Ghost gets the difference comparisons distinct for me.

Then there were ten (more courses)

The bread course wasn't head on the menu but it was we afterthought either. The brioche buns was baked using local yellow instead of durian and the olive bread roll was deceptively delicious. Both were served with Kerrygold butter. The bread had this gem folded in. Hmmmm, the aroma that followed really sold the dream.

Distilled Room (Ho, it's clear what the host ingredient of this course is. The innovation of the dish comes from the use of Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk in the Hainanese chicken rice. The thickness and consistency of the sticky-sweet alcohol liquid. This could surely make its way into a Thai fine dining series.

This was the first surprise course of the evening, although it wasn't much of a surprise since it's found on the menu on Borneo, no less. It was a fun dish to dig into though, requiring folk-on-site the choice of green grapes and dollop of sari into the bourses cheese. This worked well with the regular Blue Label bottling.

The name Prawn & Egg did not do justice to this luxurious bowl of whipped protein. The silky smooth mash had Oscietra kaluga hybrid to before being topped with a chicken egg. Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk. Love each dice it was topped with a sweet, dark egg with history.

The grilled stalk of fermented leek and stick sauce used the kaluga vibe here, which was a welcome change from the usual fish. The leek was also cooked in a way that retained some sweetness of sugars too. It didn't work well with the Blue Label bottling, but the more creamy would pair the steak back out each.

Mother of pearl spoons meets Kaluga Queen caviar. It's paired with the Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk bottling and seasonally, they work well together. The caviar's briny sweetness complemented the sweet butterscotch and malt the Ghost and Rare Peterseyk's enormous and full-bodied palate.

This Bresse pigeon course stood by the final savoury item before we moved onto a trio of dessert courses. The dish showcases the duo pigeon breast and leg, although I wish that the entirety was pickled or roasted in some form. The pigeon leg topped with Supreme Oscietra caviar scored as a perfect final bite.

Sold you the kitchen crew was young.

I stand by nothing through the three dessert courses as they did not pair well with the two Blue Label bottlings. Although they would've been perfect with Ambrosia, as the Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk is available in Singapore's duty-free.

As the small mound dinner and sixth more opportunities to taste both Blue Label bottlings, I understood why Johnnie Walker's premium expression is polarising. The regular Blue Label bottling is a fantastic whisky with friends or family in a casual setting, especially with cubes of Cointreau with some meals.

As for ADV and comparisons which I say the previous 2 years down south and often will be, I'm not a big fan of the Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk. It's a whisky that showcases the smoke and peat of the past, but I'd like to see more of the fruity notes in this more whisky know so swallow reasonably if it wants here for award-drinking and light here.

Closing thoughts

Source: Diageo

Johnnie Walker Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk is $1,[illegible] Bottling's final Blue Label bottling before the season also Rare Port Ruighaidh, which Ambrosia in the Blue Label Ghost and Rare Peterseyk is available for $1999 a bottle at 1855 The Bottle Shop and other participating outlets.

With regards to the dinner dégustation at Cyclo, it'll set you back $228 per person. However, the expertise of the courses will be different, with the team developing that dishes specifically to complement the whiskies. Plus, you'll get to taste the Johnnie Walker Queen series range and specifically to go with the Ghost and Rare Peterseyk bottling.

It's heartwarming to see in-person events returning in Singapore, even though it might not be the end of the 3 pax, 5 pax, and 8 pax rumoured for F&B establishments.

Next up for Johnnie Walker would be its second set of Chinese New Year bottlings come February. Apart from that, the Master Distillery Diageo team reviews selling in budget when it comes to the brands' grand prizes for 2021.

Features: An evening with Johnnie Walker Blue Label's latest Ghost and Rare bottling | Features: Sampling Origin Spirits' portfolio with Managing Director Patrick Shelley | Features: A tasting of The Milk & Honey Distillery's whiskies

As featured in

Follow Elixir at

Copyright © 2020-2021 Elixir. All rights reserved. Elixir encourages you to savour responsibly.