Prose: A Prayer to Heal

By Sarah Fathima

We lived in an illusion that broken families, broken hearts, and broken promises were beyond painful to endure, and too fragile to share.

But the dark and distressing agony of witnessing our beautiful world shattering into pieces, without the slightest trace of peace, to see happy homes reduced to silent tears, countless lives lost, too unforgettable and empty a void for humanity as a whole: what could be more heart-rending a calamity, we ask!

I pray for a healed and safe world, free from all the brokenness. Where peace's glory abides, dreams soar, joy laughs carefree, harmony is strength, love is universal, hope is bright, goodness enjoins, freedom is honoured, tears are scarce, voices are heard, pain is felt, safety feels like home.

And each day is God's gentle reminder of how fortunate we are, to not just spectate, but thrive, to carefully and conscientiously build and leave behind a pure haven of peace, for all children alike.
