

The Irish Experience

The Republic of Ireland, famously known as the Emerald Isle, is a land once visited never forgotten. It is a literal 'heaven on earth' for outdoor-venturing people with its striking coastlines, un-spoiled landscapes, and awe-inspiring Celtic castles and cathedrals. Activities like walking, fishing, sailing, mountain climbing, and hiking on these breathtaking pieces of land is a dream come true for any daring adventurer. Indoor-activity people are also in for a great treat as the world-famous Irish Pubs are ever-ready serving Carvery lunch and stout beer, where they can sit and relax watching the Irish step-dance.

The best period to visit Ireland is from May to September, which is also the peak season. Witness the whole land blossoming into its best with longer days, warm weather and never-ending stream of local festivals. St Patrick's Day, Great Irish Music Festival, Art Festival, Galway Pride, Muff Festival, Puck Fair, Rose of Tralee International Festival and Theater Festival are just some of the events where you can lose yourself in and experience the Irish culture in its most joyous and purest form. While most of these festivals are centered in and around Dublin and Belfast, almost each town enthusiastically hosts fairs and parades and contributes to the grand celebrations across the country.

The relatively high rates of food are certainly worth their quality. Potatoes are most commonly used in various cuisines but fish and lamb dishes are equally popular. Small towns like Cork and Kinsale are internationally renowned for their excellent fish restaurants. Irish people don't like their food very spicy and cook the dishes for longer periods. The waiting time is perfectly utilized for mentally stimulating discussions, jokes, poetry, as well as dance! Soda bread and a strong-tasting beer- Guinness, are some of the highlights of the urban areas, while Smithwick's ales are famous in rural areas. Teetotalers should not worry as Tea is already competing for the honors of national drink.

Luxurious as well as bed and breakfast hotels are widely available all across the country. These are usually run by families and thus provide the best of services with genuine warmth. Various specialized city tours of local attractions are irresistibly welcoming. Blarney Castle is famous for its 'luck stones' which require only a kiss on these stones to turn your fortune! Cliffs of Moher and Kilkenny are some of the country's most visited attractions. Helpful and friendly people never make you feel as if you are away from home.

The Irish Culture

The fascinatingly diverse and rich culture of Ireland holds something of interest for anyone and everyone all around the world. Several distinctly different cultural divides can be readily observed here, such as that between the catholic and protestant on the Northern Island, between the citizens and their fellow countrymen, between the native Irish speaking people and the English speaking populous, and the newly developed culture of immigrants.

True Irish spirit remains undivided though, which can be witnessed in an exuberant display of various traditions in and around Ireland. Having a bite of colcannon (a tasty mixture of cabbage and potatoes) on Halloween night, outfitting oneself in full green on St Patrick's Day, matching steps with vibrantly choreographed tap-dance and getting high with energetic Irish music...be it young or old, people spontaneously engage in all of these cultural activities.

Apart from dance and music, the Irishmen excel at literature and wit. Count on them to give you an instant mood lift if you are feeling down. The country is also seeing a rising number of stand-up comedians in recent years. Rarely will you see 'Comedy Festivals' hosted anywhere else as enthusiastically as they are in Ireland.

Wondrous Celtic legends and myths still echo in the modern Irish culture with mystical fables of heroes conquering Giants and their inspiring tales of bravery. In the 20th century, the country produced not less than four Nobel Prize winners for literature, making it the only country to achieve so.

Irish Pubs are famous all over the world and continue to be at a fulcrum of social, cultural and musical life. Along with most exotic drinks, you can also find most interesting discussions brewing in these always-happening places. Irish people show remarkable knowledge in topics ranging from politics to poetry and are more than willing to indulge in mentally stimulating debates with you. Don't be surprised if they ask you to join for a quick tap dance session too! Assortment of steamy tongue-tingling food always awaits afterwards...
