“The top independent wrestling prospects have been ID’d... and now, we’re ready to spotlight the best of the best.

Here’s your first look at the Men’s and Women’s

@WWEID Championships.”

The WWE Independent Development (ID) program was initially announced in October 2024 and was implemented as a support tool for independent wrestlers to have a pathway for a potential career in WWE.

So far, independent wrestlers such as Sean Legacy, Cappuccino Jones and Zayda Steel have been branded with WWE ID designation amongst others.

Wrestling schools such as Booker T’s Reality of Wrestling, Cody Rhodes’ Nightmare Factory and Seth Rollins Black and Brave Wrestling Academy are a few of the schools to have also been given WWE ID designation.

The WWE ID program has drawn comparisons to the Next In Line (NIL) program that WWE offers to college athletes as a mutually beneficial partnership where WWE essentially gets first dibs on potential talent and that talent gets paid, spotlighted and trained by the promotion.

WWE also announced that the new championships will be determined through a tournament that will take place across independent wrestling promotions.
