To whom it may concern:

Ms. Megan Domson has been my student in three upper-division English courses at the University of Florida—Milton's Poetry and Prose in the fall of 2024, and Freud's Interpretation of Dreams as well as Shakespeare: Reunions in Death this past spring—and she has enrolled in both my courses for the fall of 2025. I have thus come to know her well both as a person and as a student, and I am pleased to recommend her to you for any jobs or internships for which she may be applying, especially those in the fields of editing and publishing.

Megan is bright, earnest, conscientious, and engaging. She participates actively and constructively in class discussions. She is eager to learn and always open to feedback. In all three courses, she took the opportunity I offered to rewrite her paper to improve her grade after I had read and commented on the first version, and her efforts paid off every time. She is rightly proud of her paper for the Shakespeare class, in which she rewrote her paper about Desdemona and Cordelia, "Ideal Shakespearean Women: Extensions of Men," and pulled her grade up to an A.

I have only good things to say about Megan Domson's character, and I am sure she would be an asset in any position for which she is applying. I urge you to meet her and bring her on board in your firm.

Please don't hesitate to contact me by email <plr@ufl.edu> if I may be of any further assistance.

Yours sincerely,

Peter L. Rudnytsky
