

A 'Dangerous'- first single by Elnathan

Marcus T. Blake

Elnathan releases a 'Dangerous' first studio single. This exciting debut is part of his concept EP based on the 5 stages of grief, 'Dangerous' exploring the stage of anger. Elnathan showcases a strong vocal performance and excellent production skills, creating a unique blend of rnb and soul.

Isolated drums kick off the track, almost like impending danger. Then the soft piano sweeps in with a melancholic melody along with the chorus. I really loved the split-second time signature change of the drums in the middle of the verses. It illustrates a feeling of intrusion from a thought, a flicker of anger.

The lyrics are catchy and tell a fascinating story of a character angry, blaming their problems on a person they once loved, calling her dangerous. As the song progresses, the character slowly comes to the realisation that he is the problem and the reason, that in fact he is the dangerous one.

The last quarter of the song ramps up with the piano becoming more prominent and the growing harmonies. The instrumentation takes so many exciting turns, capturing you in its allure.

Overall, this song is fantastic! The instrumentation is remarkable! It keeps you hooked, excited in anticipation; you never know where the song might go next! The vocal performance is brilliant and the lyrics tell an interesting story full of emotion. Elnathan is definitely an artist you should keep an eye on. I can't wait to listen the rest of his EP and see where he goes next!

