Tech Innovations Inc. launches investigation of its newest product: the SmartGlove

BOULDER, Colo. (Oct. 11, 2025)— Tech Innovations Inc. announced today they will be conducting an internal investigation into SmartGlove. There have been recent claims by three customers that the glove burned their hand when connected to Wi-Fi.

The claims have come from Houston, New Orleans and Key West with the same issue in which the product will be on hold until further notice. In addition, there have been claims from a former employee that Louie Williams, founder and CEO of Tech Innovations Inc., was aware of the dangers when SmartGlove was released.

"While the Board does not expect to find fault with the product or with management, we are looking into the matter, because customer safety is and always will be our company's top priority," said a spokesperson from the board of directors of Tech Innovations Inc.

To ensure safety for all customers, the company is asking to deactivate the Wi-Fi feature until it is safe to do so. Tech Innovations Inc. is committed to the safety and satisfaction of all customers when it comes to their products.
