MOOD BOARDS

DESIGN RATIONALE

I really wanted the entire space to have a community like design, to encourage people to socialise with fellow guests. All the accommodation pods are linked to each other through the path way, which is a border along the community space. The community space is the center of the entire site, which promotes socialisation amongst guests and encourages them to come out to the community space instead of staying in their pods. It is a very open area with comfortable shading from trees, making it a comfortable place for people to relax. The whole site is covered in trees and greenery to promote the sustainability aspect of the site, as well as help transport guests to a more serene and calming place. The accommodation pods have a very green and minimalist aesthetic, which were inspired by Japanese interior designs. I wanted the pods to have an open and nature focused concept, so I incorporated lots of wood and stone elements into the interior design while limiting the number of walls. The service pod is located at a far end of the site, which makes locating it easy for guests, this prevents confusion amongst guests when navigating their way to the service pod. It helps that the service pod has an entirely different aesthetic to the accommodation pods. Overall, I believe my design helps to foster Singapore's eco-tourism sector and enhance the appeal of off-the-grid vacation experiences.
