

RELATIONSHIPS ARE INVESTMENTS

"If civilization is to survive, we must cultivate the science of human relationships." These were the words of Franklin D. Roosevelt, 32nd President of the United States. Ever wondered what the world would be like if humanity were to isolate themselves? As human beings, who are born as social beings to communicate and depend on each other for survival. An infant depends on it's parents to survive and grow. A scaling business is nothing without it's costumers and an organization needs the right employees to function. This proves that in order to survive, you must make the right relationships. Life becomes more meaningful when you find yourself in the right circle. This explains why relationships are an investment. However, knowing the right people to invest your time and energy is also very paramount to succeed in life. Many have lost their fame and glory due to bad circle and company so it is necessary that as one who is looking forward to making quality friendships, that you study and keenly observe your circle of friends, knowing who you can and cannot confide in. It is useful to know that not everyone who comes around you is your friend.

Again, your location and places you go determines who you meet and communicate with. Have you ever wondered how billionaires and millionaires make out time to attend a child's birthday of a fellow colleague? Out of their busy schedules, they decided to attend the birthday of a young toddler. Was this really for the birthday? One may ask. However, it is necessary to know that to define your circle, there ought to be places you do not go and places you comfortably go.

Another is your communication skills. The ability to hold open and meaningful conversations politely without having to argue or prove your point makes communication a whole lot more easier. This however, requires a lot of self control and intelligence when handling people. These people are from different homes and families and therefore react to situations differently. It is therefore your responsibility to keep the conversation free from disgust and irritation.

PHOTO CREDIT : By Ivan Samkov / Pexels