Iliman Ndiaye is a slippery attacker (#10/winger) who's best when he can play between the lines and turn quick touches into chaos. He's known for close control in tight areas, quick changes of direction, and that ability to ride contact, roll defenders, and win fouls, he makes teams defend facing their own goal. In possession he's at his best linking play and carrying the ball into the box, combining quickly and creating separation for a shot or the final pass rather than playing a safer pass. Where he can still improve is adding more consistent "decisive" output over a full season, such as making the more simple final-ball choice more often, and translating these good moments into goals/assists with regularity. While also continuing to sharpen his off-ball positioning so he impacts games even when he isn't constantly on the ball. Overall, he's a high-impact connector/ball-carrier type who can raise a team's threat level simply by being hard to pin down/stop once he gets the ball.
