Ben Knight is a left-footed right winger for Cambridge who plays like an inside forward: he looks to receive wide, take his man on, and then drive into shooting or final-pass positions rather than hanging on the touchline. He's known for his dribbling and for having an eye for goal, with the ability to turn 1v1 wins into real end product, by finishing himself or slipping in a pass when the space opens up. The big limitation with his profile is his physicality: being very small means he can struggle in heavy contact and have phases where games pass him by if he can't find space early. If he can add some more robustness, protect the ball better under pressure, and keep his influence when matches get scrappy, he has the ability to be a consistent threat in League Two.
