Midfielder • 18 yrs • LOSC Lille • Ligue 1 • 2025/2026

France • Right foot • 186cm • Contract: June 2029

Ayyoub Bouaddi is an 18-year-old central defensive midfielder currently playing for LOSC Lille, where he has already established himself as a trusted option in senior football. He operates as a deeper midfielder, often tasked with supporting build-up phases, offering passing security, and positioning himself to regain possession in central zones. Despite his age, he plays with a calmness and composure that allows him to function in high-tempo matches without appearing rushed.

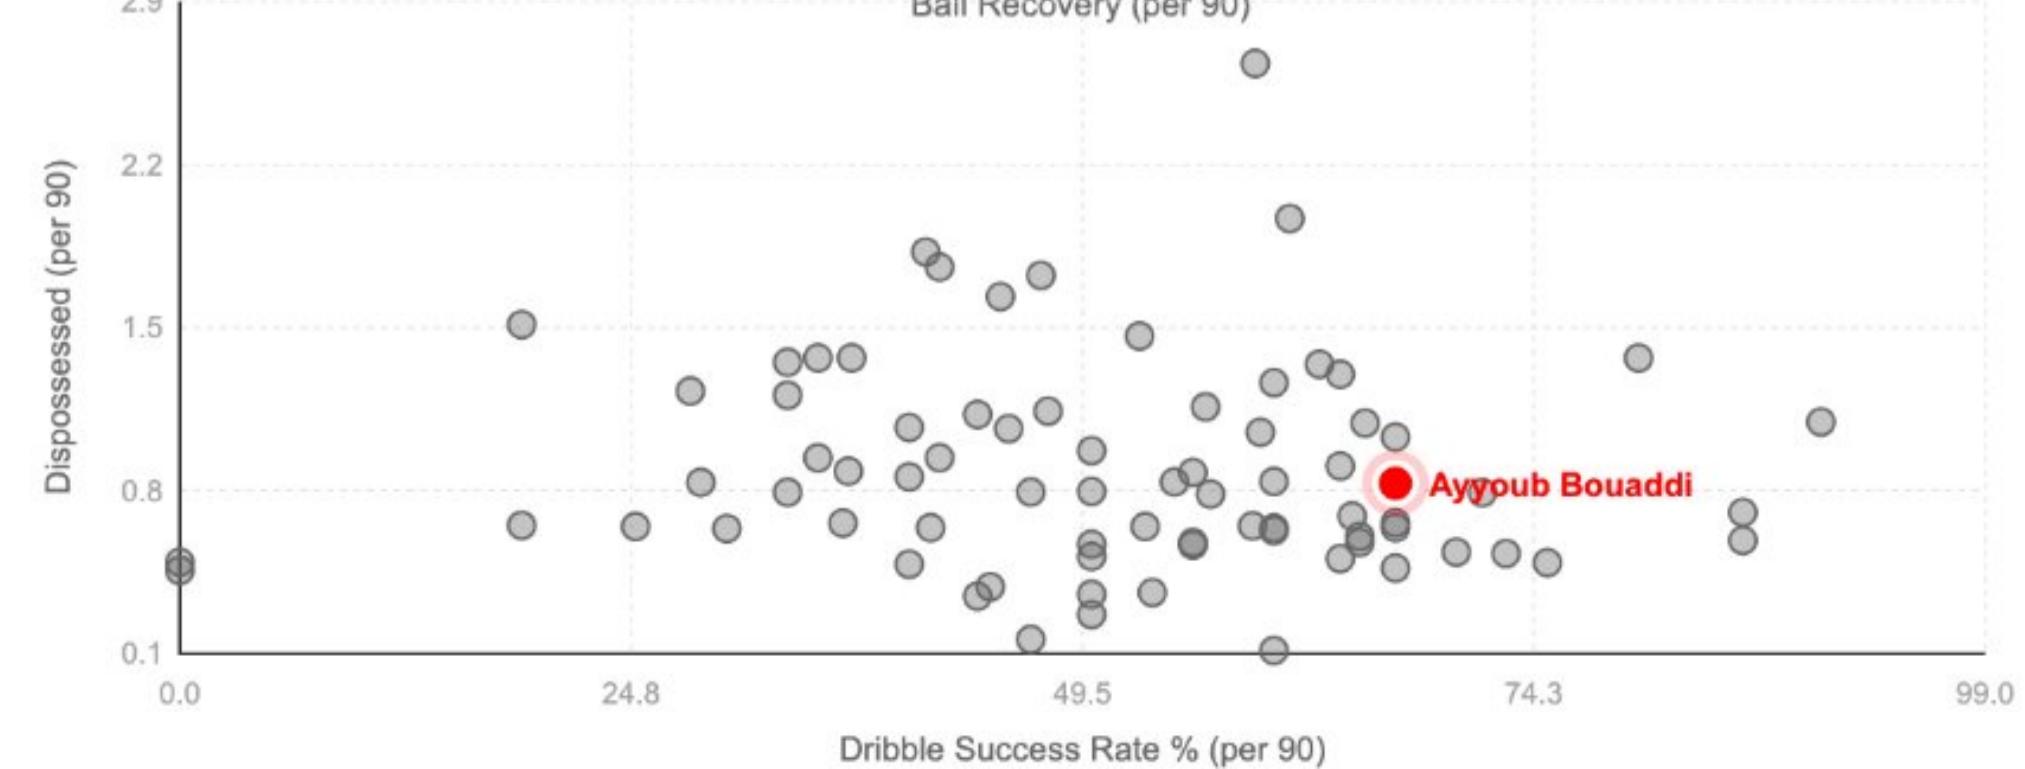

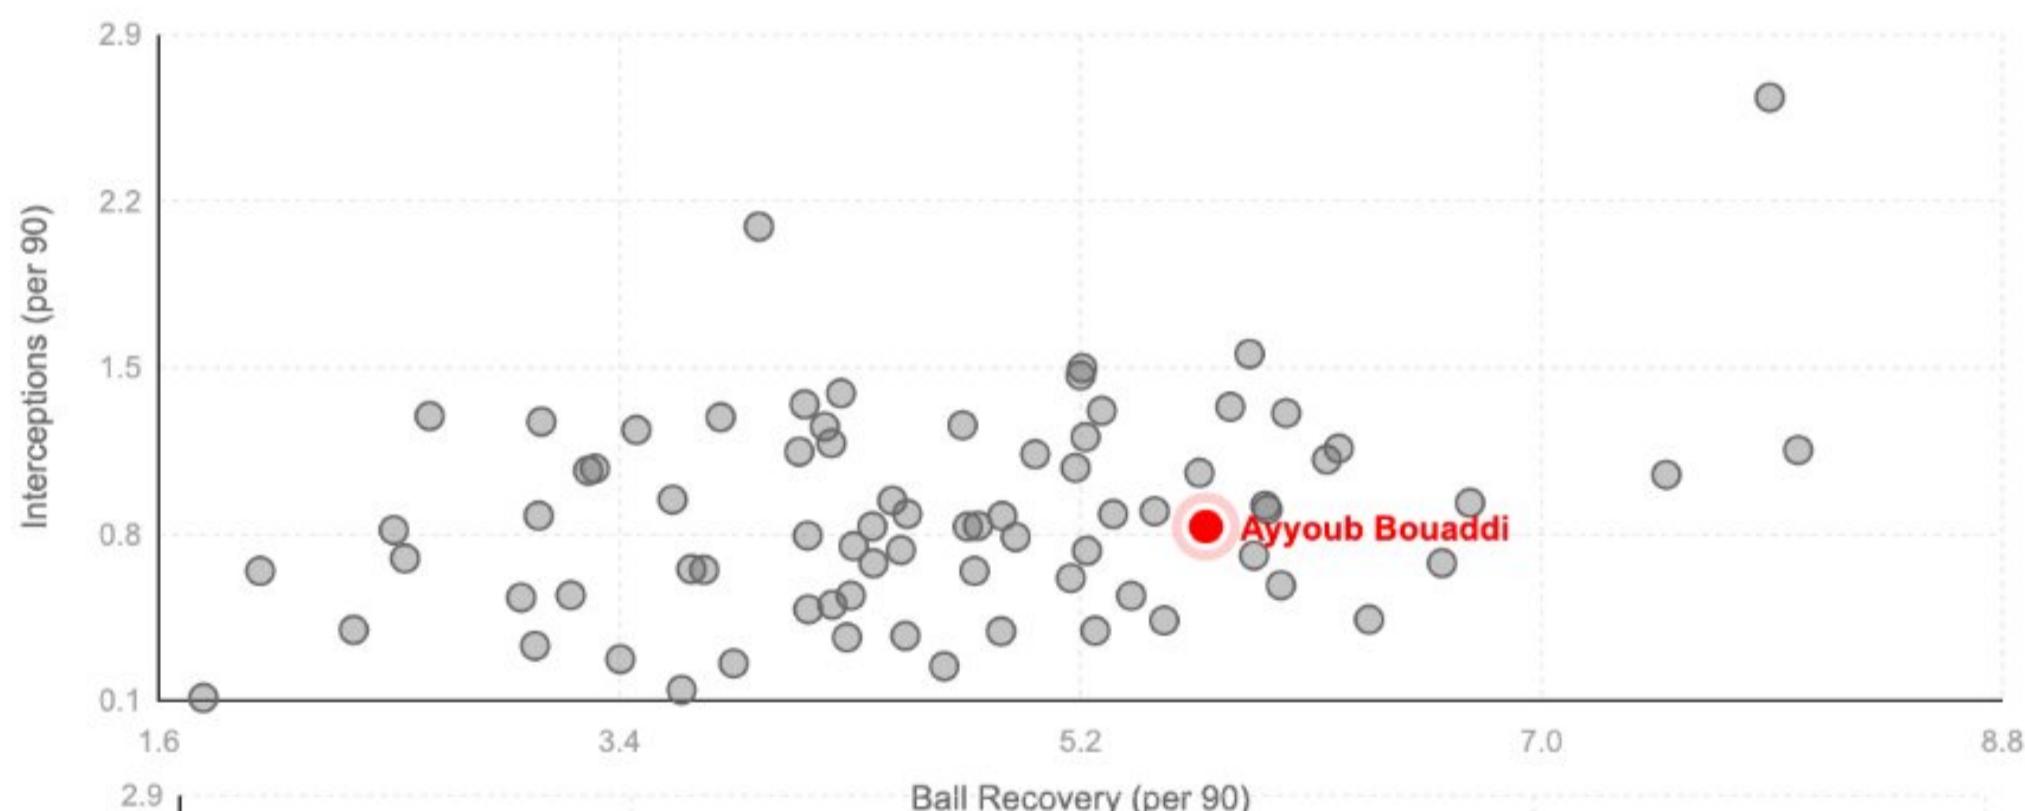

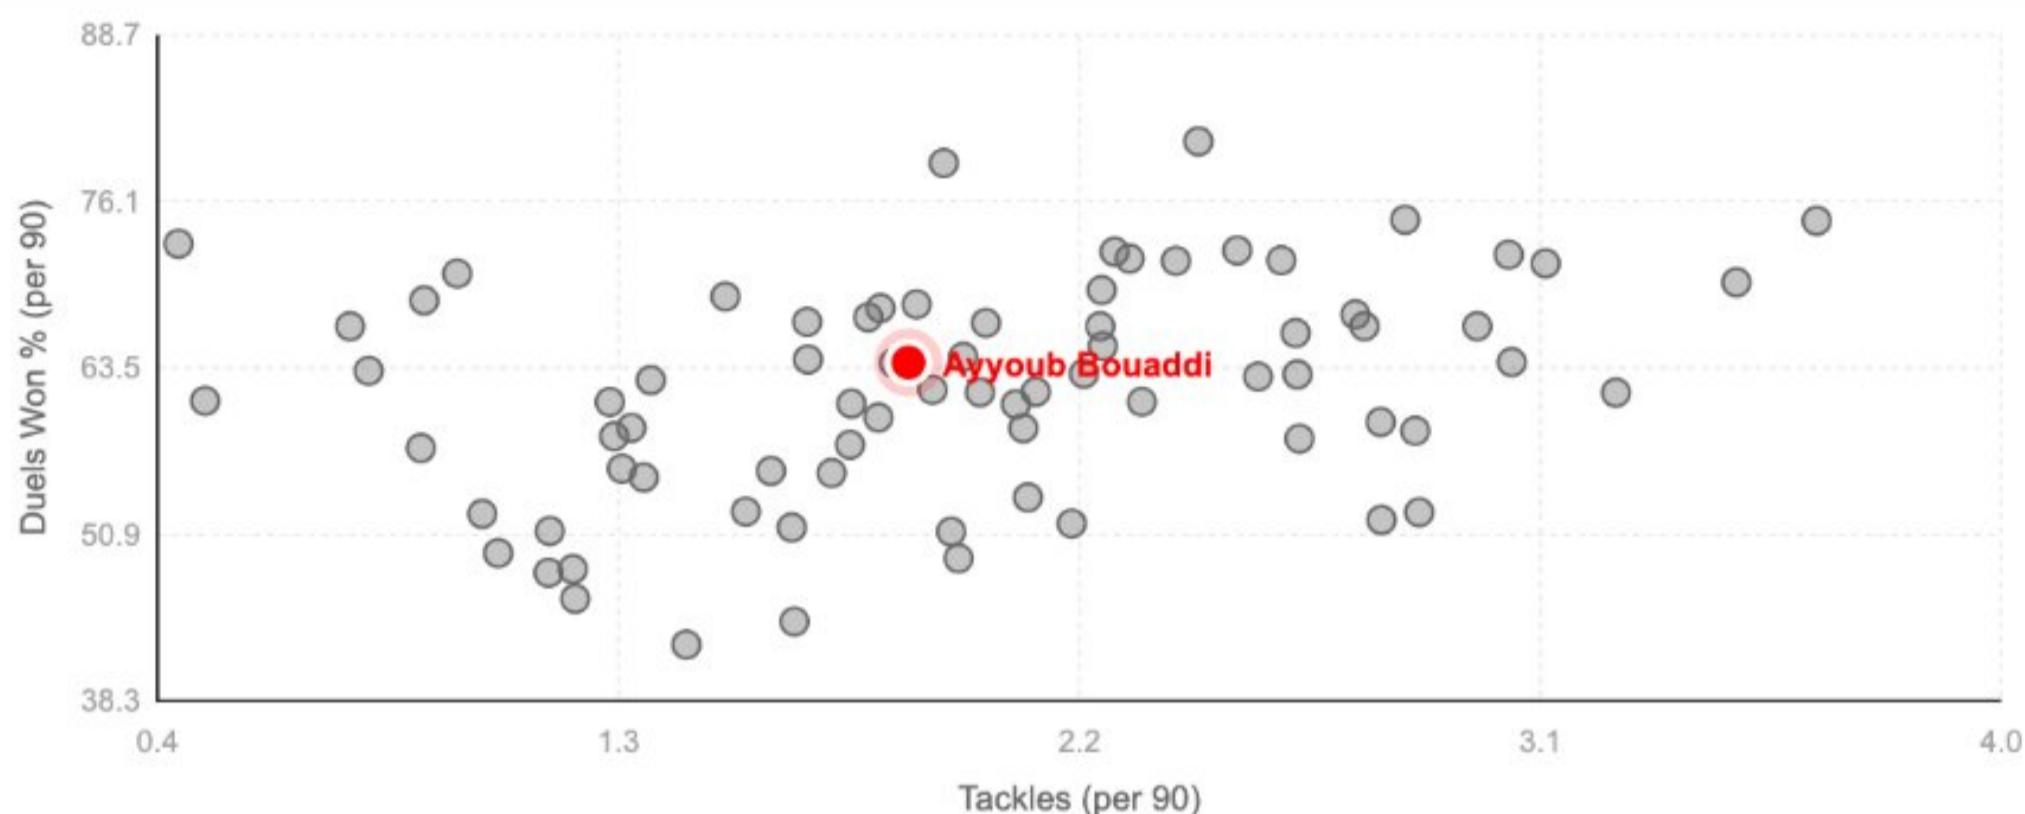

Bouaddi's game is built around intelligence and control. He reads play well defensively, anticipates passing lanes, and positions himself to collect loose balls and second actions. In possession, he is secure and efficient, keeping the ball moving with a high level of accuracy and showing the confidence to progress play when opportunities open up. Physically, his influence in direct duels continues to grow as he gains experience, but his balance, timing, and work rate allow him to compete effectively. Overall, Bouaddi profiles as a defensive midfielder whose value lies in his reliability and his ability to connect defensive work with controlled possession.

Conclusion

Ayyoub Bouaddi has transitioned from a promising academy midfielder into a genuine first-team contributor in Ligue 1 and European competition. After joining L OSC Lille's academy in 2021 and signing his first professional contract, he became the youngest player ever to feature in a UEFA club competition for Lille and the youngest Lille player to appear in Ligue 1 since the early 1980s. He has since accumulated regular minutes in domestic league and continental fixtures, including starts in the UEFA Champions League, which has increased his maturity and exposed him to high-level defensive and transitional scenarios.

Bouaddi's profile is attracting significant attention from clubs beyond France. Reports suggest that Premier League sides like Arsenal and Manchester United have monitored his development, and that interest from elite European clubs — including Paris Saint-Germain and Bayern Munich — has grown as he has established himself in Lille's midfield. These links reflect broader recognition of his composure, ball retention, and capacity to contribute in multiple central roles. His contract extension through 2029 strengthens Lille's position in any potential negotiation and illustrates how highly the club values him amid increasing external demand.

Looking ahead, Bouaddi's potential is rooted in his blend of tactical discipline, ball security, and defensive intensity, traits that have helped him handle senior football pressure at a young age. The next phase of his development will involve converting his early exposure into sustained influence across full seasons, refining his progression play, and continuing to assert himself against physically demanding midfield opponents. If his trajectory continues, a move to a bigger club in the Premier League becomes a very a realistic next step.
