Oumar Solet is a 26 year old French central defender for Udinese. He combines his solid defensive instincts with an impressive ability to move the ball forward. His one-on-one defending is particularly strong; he reads the game well, often anticipating the attacker's next move and neutralising threats before they escalate. In the air, Solet doesn't shy away from a duel, which adds an extra layer of security during set-pieces and defensive situations. What really sets him apart is his exceptional progressive passing. Solet's ability to transition quickly from defence to attack is a key asset in modern football, allowing Udinese to maintain possession and build from the back. His ball recovery stats highlight his relentless work ethic, and he's consistently effective at regaining possession for his team. While his penalty area defending is above average, there are moments where he can be caught out against quicker attackers, particularly when the ball's played in behind. Overall, Solet's blend of defensive solidity and ball progression makes him a valuable asset for his side.
