Harrison Burrows is a left-sided defender, mainly a left-back/wing-back, who offers real attacking output from deep areas. He's known for his crossing delivery and final ball, plays with confidence in possession, and is happy pushing high to provide width, combine on the outside and put balls into dangerous areas, he suits teams that want their full-backs to be creators rather than just defenders. Defensively he's generally reliable but not a pure "lockdown" 1v1 full-back, so the main improvement is dealing with top-end wide threats in open space and making sure his positioning holds up when he's asked to play high and aggressive. Overall he's an attack-minded left-back whose value comes from progression and chance creation, with the key question being how cleanly that translates when his defensive demands jump.
