Darío Osorio is a left-footed winger who brings direct carrying, confidence to take defenders on, and the ability to turn attacking phases into shots or the final pass when he gets into his preferred pockets. What separates him from a lot of wide attackers is that he isn't just a final third player, he's a competitive dueller and ball-winner, contributes to the press, and will fight to regain possession, which makes him easier to build around in high-intensity systems. The main step for him now is physicality at the next level: getting stronger through contact, handling more powerful defenders over 90 minutes, and adding a bit more robustness so his game holds up when matches get more chaotic and physical. Overall, he's a high-upside winger who already gives you high level end-product and real defensive bite, with his ceiling tied to how much he can level up physically/mentally.
