Alex Jiménez is a young fullback currently at Bournemouth. He plays with aggression and pace, he is at his best when he can get tight to wingers, compete early, and then burst forward to support attacks when the space opens up. He gives you real running power down the flank, overlaps with purpose, and can help Bournemouth keep width in possession while still having the legs to recover quickly when play breaks the other way.

Defensively, he can handle open-field transitions and 1v1s through athleticism and intensity, and he doesn't shy away from contact. Where he can improve is his final ball, as sometimes it can be hit-or-miss when he arrives high, and his positioning can drift when he's asked to balance stepping out to press with protecting space behind him. These are key details that matter a lot in the Premier League as teams look to target the space around the fullbacks.
