

Thomas Avalanche Sr., Adam Jenkins, and Donovan Johnson, co-owners of Avalanche Jenkins Johnson Aeronautics, are in desperate need of help. For years, these three men, along with their children, were in full control of exploring beyond our planet. Rocket Skies Space Corporation is a new corporation with many more employees with new, fresh experience. After careful consideration, these three men bring in their old friend group from college—Heath Horowitz, Jonathan Wilson, and Kevin Peters—along with their children to help dominate control over their rival corporation. It's been around 60 years since the latest "Great Space Race," where the Soviet Union and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) fought to see who could get men on the moon. Now, it comes up to who can get their group's personal astronauts on Mars first. For the Avalanche Jenkins Johnson group, that would be the firstborn of each family. Join our brave three as they train and prepare for their journey to the stars and beyond.
