

Caitlin McAuliffe

Alamance Arts Fueling The Celebration of Art

Art is the centerpiece of humanity. People have always found a way to express emotions, tell stories, and celebrate beauty through art. It can connect a community through times of hardship and celebration. Alamance County Arts Council has promoted the celebration of the arts since 1956. Since its development, Alamance County Arts Council, eventually renamed Alamance Arts, has been a place for the arts to flourish.

“At Alamance Arts, we are committed to shaping the cultural identity of Alamance County by making art a tangible presence in the lives of its residents. We strive to enhance the quality of life by engaging people in a diverse array of art through the delivery of programming and education and through the provision of facilities, advocacy, promotion and funding.”

The non-profit’s mission statement encapsulates the remarkable work of this organization. Their extensive range of events and series, such as the Musical Chairs Concert Series, the Art Market, and a variety of art classes, cater to diverse interests and unite the community under the umbrella of expression and talent.

Just as art has evolved over time, so has the Alamance Arts venue. The Captain White House, once a family home for Captain James and Emma Holt White, now stands as Alamance Arts. The house's transformation, while preserving its original beauty, is a testament to the organization's adaptability and respect for heritage. Alamance Arts in this space is a tribute to the cherished memories the family created, embodying the beauty and future of Alamance as it continues to celebrate the community for generations.

Find your home in Alamance by celebrating the community's talents. Visit The Captain White House to see the history, preservation, and joy within Alamance County's art community.