Functional Ship Wheel
Clock $119

I will start with the vintage ship in the middle being the focal point in the office. This piece draws the eye to it as you walk into the classic coastal office. The ship wheel clock shows a radial balance because it has a center point. The decorative oyster shell woven basket provides visual interest through radiation rhythm following the shells from beginning to end. The curved line of the Jolly Sea Captain is approachable and organic free flowing wood. The functional lamp has a variety of seashells in glass with varying patterns and sizes. Peggy's Cove shows a sense of depth from the sky to the first boat sitting on the water. You can see the physical texture of the water. At times it looks smooth and rough at the same time. Total Cost: $1,202.00

Silverplate International Tray, $20

The antique silver era had many desirable collectibles for the dining room. The Reed & Barton 3D bell form has 3 points: point, line, and plane. The curved line on the tray above is quite feminine. The bowl to the left has a repeating pattern around the beveled edge. The visual design is braided. The wine cooler to the right has a progression rhythm because the object decreases with size from top to bottom. The candelabra has a oneness with the curves swirling around to the center light becoming one uniform design. The tea pot lamp is an example of artificial light that uses a LED light bulb giving off a warm cozy feeling. Total Cost: $425.90

I will describe clockwise starting with the Foo bookends. They are a mirror image of each other suggesting formality. The two-needlepoint wall art pieces are realistic by displaying equal formal and informality of depiction of the places. The temple shows a contrasted rhythm with a darker layering of roof with the red and beige in between. The panel is framed in a vertical line that helps to move the eye upwards or downwards. The mask is vivid and clear with color. The green and pink play off each other because they are complementary colors. The black lamp is balanced with a brighter floral pattern to give it a pop of design on the subdued black background. Total Cost: $1,188.00

I would like to thank Glenwood Antique Mall for acquiring such marvelous items. This is the first-time shopping in the mall, and I enjoyed it so much that I even bought some items for my own home. I did not have to go anywhere else because I found so many great ideas in Glenwood!
