Phd. in Social Analysis at University Carlos III of Madrid. My field or research is related with the study of the social impacts of climate change and its response by society and politics. Considering this approach I have focused my work in the study of human mobility related with climate change, and the capacity of government structures and policies, especially social policies, like healthcare or employment, to face climate impacts, considering the increase of inequality and poverty. During the last years I have participated in the debate on these issues, being part of various groups of experts. In addition to this approach, I have also worked in governments like the Regional Government of Castilla-La Mancha or the Ministry of Labor and Immigration of Spain.
