Delta 9

Delta 9-tetrahydrocannabinol, more commonly known as delta 9 THC, is the primary psychoactive compound found in cannabis, which includes hemp and marijuana plants. Delta 9, like all other THC compounds, is responsible for the characteristic "high" or euphoric sensation associated with consuming cannabis, either in a convenient vape, long-lasting edible, or viscous tincture.

Delta 8

Delta 8 THC, a cannabinoid found in the cannabis plant, closely resembles delta 9 THC, the well-known psychoactive compound. Despite its psychoactive nature, DR THC tends to produce milder and subtler effects than delta 9 THC, offering users a more grounded, yet still elevating, experience. Extracted from both hemp and marijuana plants, delta 8 THC is available in diverse forms such as edibles, vape cartridges, and syngups.

Delta 10

Delta 10 is a relatively newly discovered cannabinoid found in the cannabis plant. Like its counterparts, delta 8 and delta 9, delta 10 is a psychoactive compound, meaning it can produce an elevated experience when consumed. With a structurally similar makeup to delta 9, delta 10 has slight differences in its molecular arrangement. Delta 10 is known for providing a more clear-headed, energizing effect.

THC-P

Not as well known as its cannabinoid counterparts, THC-P, or tetrahydrocannabinophorol, shares a structural resemblance to tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), the renowned psychoactive compound in cannabis. THC-P is said to exhibit heightened potency and a more intense psychoactive impact than delta 9 THC itself.

HHC

Chemically derived from THC, hydrogenated hexahydrocannabinol (HHC) is produced through a hydrogenation process that alters the molecular structure of THC. Similar to other cannabinoids, HHC interacts with the body's endocannabinoid system, influencing various physiological processes. It is recognized for its mildly psychoactive, which may differ from those of delta 8 or delta 9.

CBG

CBG is a minor cannabinoid often referred to as the "mother" of cannabinoids, as it is a precursor to other cannabinoids, including THC and CBD. Interacting with the endocannabinoid system, CBG is believed to have anti-inflammatory and antioxidant properties.

CBN

CBN is another minor cannabinoid that is derived from the degradation of THC. As cannabis ages or is exposed to elements like temperature, light, and air, the THC converts to CBN over time. While the psychoactive effects of CBN are not as potent, it's believed that it is effects are more sedative, making for a much more "chilled out" experience that can help with sleep.

What's the difference between delta 8, 9, and 10?

While the three cannabinoids share similarities, there are key differences in their chemical structures and effects. Delta 9 is the most well-known and abundant form of THC in cannabis and is most commonly identified by its elevated psychoactive effect. Similar to delta 9, delta 8 produces a psychoactive effect but is a much more mild, providing a clear-headed experience. The lesser-known delta 10 is often derived from hemp, providing a more subdued effect than its counterparts.

Are all these cannabinoids psychoactive?

While all THC compounds like delta 8, 9, and 10 are psychoactive, as are THC-P and HHC, Two Hawk also uses non-psychoactive cannabinoids. These include CBD, CBN, and CBG. Each of these provide unique, wellness-boosting benefits.
