What is CBD?

Cannabidiol, or CBD, is a commonly occurring compound in the cannabinoid family. It engages with the body's endocannabinoid system, a network of receptors that regulates vital functions such as mood, memory, and appetite. CBD, found in various CBD products, interacts with these receptors, enhancing the system's performance and contributing to a variety of wellness benefits.

Full spectrum CBD

Full spectrum CBD is a form of CBD encompassing a diverse array of cannabinoids, terpenes, and other beneficial compounds naturally occurring in the cannabis plant, ensuring a more comprehensive collection of plant compounds.

One may encounter traces of various cannabinoids when using a full spectrum CBD product, including THC, albeit in minute amounts below the legal threshold of 0.3% THC by dry weight. The inclusion of multiple cannabinoids, terpenes, and flavonoids in full spectrum CBD is thought to contribute to the Entourage Effect. This theory proposes that the collective presence of these compounds may amplify the overall therapeutic effects of CBD, fostering a more encompassing wellness experience.

CBG

Cannabigerol, or CBG, is one of the many cannabinoids found in the cannabis plant. It is considered a minor cannabinoid because it occurs in lower concentrations compared to more well-known cannabinoids like THC and CBD. CBG is often referred to as the "mother cannabinoid" because it is a precursor to other cannabinoids. CBG and CBD engage with distinct receptors in unique ways, providing varied yet complementary therapeutic advantages that synergize for enhanced effects when used together.

CBN

CBN, or cannabinol, is another non-psychoactive cannabinoid found in cannabis plants. It is a natural derivative of THC as it forms when THC ages or is exposed to oxygen and light. CBN is known for its potential sedative properties and is often associated with promoting relaxation and sleep. While it is found in trace amounts in fresh cannabis, it becomes more prominent in aged or oxidized cannabis products.
