The Background of Bellaire, TX

Bellaire, TX is a city in southwest Harris County, Texas. It was founded in 1908 as part of William Marsh Rice's 9,449 acres ranch by the president of the South End Land Company— William Wright Baldwin.

Known as a residential neighborhood with large oaks lining streets, and custom-built homes, Bellaire, TX naturally attracts many homeowners. In fact, 87 percent of residents own homes, making Bellaire one of the best suburbs in Houston to reside.

The 6,000 homes in Bellaire are a mixture of the 1950s and 1960s style ranch homes and new mansions. Older single-family houses often have house plans of three to four bedrooms, while more modern estate-style homes are double the size.

Filled with an array of high-end restaurants, coffee shops, and parks—it's no wonder Bellaire, TX, is called the "City of Homes. " The city is brimming with fun-filled attractions like:

- Bellaire Town Square Family Aquatic Center

- Officer Lucy Dog Park
- Bellaire Library
- Nature Discovery Center

Overall, Bellaire is a great city to live, work, and raise a family. Ease of connectivity to other cities and business hubs makes it a desirable choice for real estate investors as well.
