Common Houston Wildlife Problems

Some of the wildlife pests that plague Houston, TX—endangering city residents with their deadly bites, aggression, and capacity to spread diseases include:

- Snakes
- Feral hogs
- Armadillos

Raccoon Removal in Houston

Raccoons are also a major problem in the area. These pests forage in trash bins for food and infiltrate homes for shelter. Known for spreading rabies—raccoons should be avoided at all costs.

As with many urban areas, these pests are adept climbers with clever methods for sneaking into your home. Raccoons are naturally curious, smart, and agile creatures that love to make your home their home. Though wild animals at heart, raccoons seek out warm, safe spaces for den sites during the cold winter months before birthing season. Ideal locations to nest include:

- Chimneys and attics
- Sheds
- Decks
- Porches

The Dangers of Raccoons

While they may look cute and cuddly, don't let their exterior fool you. Raccoons are incredibly destructive and dangerous creatures that are best left in the wild.

Raccoons can cost you thousands of dollars of in-home repairs and can endanger humans and pets as common carriers of rabies and other harmful diseases.

Q&A with Your Local Franchise Owner

What are some of the most common wildlife issues that homeowners face in your area?

Roof rats, squirrels, and raccoons (year-round). Bats are seasonal (February - November). Mice in new developments.

How do the seasons affect wildlife activity in your area?

Bats are affected by season (Spring-Fall). Rats and mice are all year-round—as are other mammals—but removal is more complicated during baby season.

Any prevention tips for residents in your area?

- Homeowners should cut trees back away from the roofline.
- Any dense foliage or plants should be trimmed a few inches away from the perimeter of the home.
- Pick up fruit from fallen trees to reduce easy access to food sources.
- Feed pets indoors whenever possible.
- Clean up pets' fecal matter from yard regularly to avoid attracting pests.

When should homeowners call Critter Control?

Homeowners should call the critter control as soon as they suspect a pest is in or trying to get in their home. Prevention and early detection are always a more cost-effective process to remedy the situation and prevent any critter related damage.

If you suspect you have a critter in the home, don't face it alone. Confining a critter and their young inside your home will likely result in more damage. Call the professionals.
