Cafe Zarah, Beijing

Cafe Zarah

Gulou's hidden music escape and cafe

The narrow streets of Beijing hutongs are a treasure trove of undiscovered coffee shops, eateries, and quirky novelty stores. Set along a busy main street in the hip hutong area of Gulou, you'll find an industrial-chic cafe that has become a favourite hangout for freelancers, coffee lovers, and music aficionados. Housed in a renovated ancient Chinese courtyard, Cafe Zarah, started by a German-Chinese duo offers a trendy space that is accepting of all. As you walk by the cafe, the makeshift street-step patio silently commands your attention and beckons for you to enter.

To enter one needs to pass through the floor to ceiling glass doors. Once inside, the expansive space that welcomes you is light and airy, and is complemented by the polished grey concrete walls, strong wood and steel accents, and striking minimalistic decor. As you walk through the cafe, the radiant sunlight beaming through the glass casings lead you to the charming outdoor terrace. The fusion of Chinese architecture with each design element work in tandem to create a European vibe that is the perfect blend of "east meets west."

The menu is Chinese and European inspired and offers authentic European breakfast, tasty small bites, and delicious lunch and dinner options. The cajun spiced potato wedges and pizza boazza are favourites, as well as the soft fluffy waffles. For the drink enthusiasts, the coffee is of superior quality and the unique cocktails change according to the seasons.

What gives Cafe Zarah an edge over other cafes in the area is, when the sun goes down the cafe transforms into a groovy ambient space, with low lighting and a DJ spinning only the finest deep house, techno and electronic beats. If you're a music snob, an avid coffee lover, or someone who enjoys their own company Cafe Zarah is a place that should be on your list.

5 BEIJING SHARED BICYCLE RIDERS YOU WANT TO KILL

Commuting in a crowded megacity with 21 million people can be extremely tiring and somewhat frustrating. With the sudden increase in shared bicycles, the stress of travelling has been cut in half, making the bicycles a transportation blessing. However, the same cannot be said about the riders who you encounter on the daily. Daily, riders are a curse and a vicious "cycle" that work on your nerves and test your patience. Some days you wish you could just cast a spell to kill them. Let us introduce you to the five types of shared bicycle riders you would want to kill.

From the moment their feet find solace on the bike pedals their inner rock star surfaces - their instrument of choice, the small bell that they ring ALL THE TIME. The small bell ringers race through the city streets with their thumb glued to the little thing. Ding-a-ling, the quirky, crisp and sad sound is a never-fading chime that is heard whether there's someone in front of them or not. Maybe the continuous ding-a-ling bell chime acts as a release for their pent up emotions, or maybe they are just trying to broadcast that they are deaf. Perhaps they spent their last RMB 200 to top up their shared bike, and now they can't pay RMB 15 to replace the earphones that fell out of their pocket, making the bell chime the perfect self-entertainment replacement. Or maybe the endless ding-a-ling is just an ancient chime to summon the dead.

Sidewalk Bully

Not being fully satisfied with the bike lane as their authorized battlefield, they set their eyes on the less-competitive battlefield – the sidewalk. This untouched, virgin land, is perfect for them to find the self-esteem that they've lost on Beijing's merciless roads, as here they can exhibit their sidewalk bully status. Sidewalk bullies try to run over anyone from young to old, they race with the speed walkers, they ring their bells insistently at the disabled, and they explore the potholes on the sidewalk no matter how bumpy it is. One would think that they are on the quest to win The Amazing Race. However, the truth is, if you are one of them, you are not royalty, and maybe you want to call a shrink?

Slowpoke

Their sole purpose of being alive is to be conservative. This includes walking on the sidewalk, chewing each bite more than 20 times, drinking moderately or not at all, staying clear of all sugary treats, and holding a dubious attitude towards trying street food in the Hutongs. Slowpokes move at a snail's pace of 2 km per hour and cannot be encouraged to go faster as the stimulation of extreme speed will kill them. In fact, urging them to go faster would be a pointless exercise. Their inner-peace gives them the power to be triumphant over the annoying, short-tempered millennials trying to push their buttons because they aim to live for more than 100 years.

Social Butterfly

We get the pressure to socialise with your friends, or to snap the perfect social media picture with your bestie, but could you please not block the whole bike lane? While there is no better place than the bike lane to imitate the classic scenes of Friends, at the same time other users might be in a hurry, dashing to play superman or just in a rush to deal with a work crisis. Instead of playing the role of a traffic policeman and trying to control the traffic by blocking the whole way, we suggest parking your bikes on the sidewalk and showing-off your social butterfly status by starting a solo concert surrounded by your friends or fans.

Smartphone Addict

Should we say congrats to them that they have a smartphone? Well, using a smartphone while riding is not something they should be congratulated for. What could be so urgent that they have to reply to a message while riding? Or, is keeping up-to-date with Korean soap operas more important than their safety that they have to watch it during their ride? Mate, get a life. Smartphone addicts pay so much attention to their phones that they ignore every possible written or unwritten law of the road. They should be put into detention for the lack of attention they pay to traffic lights, pedestrians and cars. Wake up smartphone addicts, set your sight back on the road, before you get killed.

As if these riders are not frustrating enough, there are also more than five types of annoying riders. Amongst them are the idealists and slackers. The idealists never find the perfect bike and have to keep scanning. The slackers throw their bikes on top of the pile instead of parking properly, just like how they are thrown away from their exes.

As much as we appreciate the benefits of shared bicycles, we sincerely hope that you never meet these Beijing shared bicycle riders and enjoy your daily ride.

TELL US ABOUT YOUR PERFECT BEIJING DAY

Close your eyes, take a deep breath, and let your imagination take hold. Now, slowly drift to a place where you aren't afraid to dream big. Consider this: if your free time was in abundance and your budget significantly bloated, how would you spend your perfect day in Beijing?

On every turn, Beijing has something unique to offer - from coffee shops to museums, and parks to art galleries, and answering the question may seem challenging. However, a recent article by Travel and Leisure titled "How to Have the Perfect Day in Beijing," may help with some answers. The essence of the article is a simple yet unique itinerary that begins with a morning of gallery hopping, and coffee-sipping at the Meridian Space, followed by a visit to a studio owned by Ma Ke, "the fashion designer who makes pieces for China's first lady." The day then begins to evolve with a stop at Old Beijing's Sino-French University to see the Chinese-European imports at Yishu 8 gallery while moving towards the Forbidden City, a stop highly recommended by the author. As the day unwinds, a visit to the top of Jingshan Park is on the cards for 360-degree views of Beijing which is a sight to behold, before heading to Capital M for a nightcap.

As enticing as that itinerary sounds, we know that some Beijingers might deem it too pretentious, so for something more akin to what our readers might recognize, Metro UK compiled several suggestions and called it a guide on "How to live like a local in Beijing." Their guide takes you on a journey to experience the non-touristy side that Beijing has to offer. Metro UK's guide includes a visit to Great Leap Brewing and The Taco Bar in the opulent Sanlitun area, a stroll down the effervescent Ghost Street, and a cultural stop at Lama Temple or Beihai Park. The guide also somewhat inexplicably suggests, a stay at the Conrad Beijing, where a one-night stay in a double bedroom (RMB 1,600) is equivalent to one-quarter of the average Beijinger's monthly wage. "How to live like a rich white girl in Beijing" may have been a more apt title for that piece.

Meanwhile, back at the Beijinger, we would rather opt for one of the following plans to have a perfect Peking day:

Watery hutong happenings:

Begin the day with a skate or boat ride on Houhai lake (depending on the time of year), followed by a steamy, saliva-inducing Mongolian hotpot at Nanmen Suanrou (the most underrated hot pot joint in town). Top this off with an aimless stroll through the nearby hutongs and along the lake, watching as the light of dusk reflects on the water.
