Dear Friend,

As we all face the threat of COVID-19, I want to provide a quick update to our valuable supporters.

Catholic Relief Services is working around the clock in the most vulnerable places, especially communities that lack infrastructure to handle a health care crisis. There is a lot of fear, for good reason, but we are all taking every precaution.

You, too, have likely experienced disruptions and disappointments due to the coronavirus. Some people are missing family reunions, weddings and graduations; some are feeling isolated at home when they would rather be working as normal, or out with friends and family.

This is a critical time for everyone around the world—especially for the most vulnerable people around the world.

Help Families Today

In times like these, we are—and and always have been—prepared because of people like you. CRS and its local partners have a longstanding presence and trusted relationships across the world.

We currently carry out a wide range of health-related activities tailored to the needs of each country and community we serve. Experienced in providing intensive support in response to global health crises, CRS is prepared to respond immediately and efficiently to the coronavirus.

And, it's because of you, Friend, that we are able to do this. You have helped us respond to natural disasters, emergencies and health crises like these.

Rush Help Now

Will you help families be ready for these emergencies today?

It's in times like these that we support each other and pray together.

And even in the midst of this global pandemic, your support allows us to continue to stand with the world's most vulnerable as they face the same challenges that we do—ensuring our families don't go hungry, keeping children safe and healthy, and supporting our brothers and sisters in need.

It's in times like these, you have cared and responded in prayers and in gifts. And I know that this time is no different.

Thank you for your caring generosity!

Peace and light,

Sean L. Callahan
