FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

New Holesome Donut Plant to Help Prosper Town

WILMINGTON, Del. – The Holesome Donut Company will further flourish its business and create over 700 new jobs by establishing a new factory in Repton, Alabama with plans for completion on November 15.

The city of Repton currently only has a 14 percent unemployment rate, which is slightly below the state average. Construction of the $3 million doughnut factory will help further uplift the town by creating over 700 new jobs and bringing in more than 100 families to work at the factory.

“We believe that the future of America, like its past, lies in small towns like [Repton],” Holesome Donut Company President Lonny Joe Underwood said. “We want to be an integral part of this community and make it just as prosperous as it should be.”

Holesome Donut Company had to decide where to house the new factory out of a pool of at least 12 other small towns in Tennessee, Georgia, and Mississippi. Repton was chosen because of its desirable location, low interest rates offered by local banks, and the ability to build roads and sidewalks, waste disposal facilities, and recreation areas near the plant.

The new plant in Repton will make and package doughnuts for shipping to all parts of Alabama. The company plans to further expand across the Sunbelt and help other small towns like Repton prosper by bringing new jobs and business.
