

Wherever you are, we'll meet you there!

We're In This Together.

For this edition of our newsletter, we're holding two states at once: urgency and calm. For some of you, time is of the essence. For others, time may be standing still as you catch your breath, knowing your community will hold space for you. Both belong here.

Lung cancer claims more lives than breast, colon, and prostate cancers combined, yet it receives a fraction of the research funding or the public attention that those cancers do. Consequently, the people affected by lung cancer often don't get the support they deserve.

LCFA exists to close that gap and help focus attention on treatment and hope. Whether you're here to give support or find it, you're in the right place.

Support Spring Drive

Your support has made incredible things possible, and we hope we can count on you again in the closing week of the Spring Campaign.

The grants we award at the end of this campaign aren't abstract. They are specific researchers at specific institutions, waiting on a funding decision. When this campaign closes, those decisions get made. Fully funded campaigns mean more grants approved. Campaigns that fall short mean some of those researchers — and their patients — wait another year.

If you've been considering a donation, this week is a great opportunity. A gift of any size before Friday counts toward these final decisions.

The Gift of Hope, this Spring - lcf.org/give

You heard the news today, oh boy! —

If you've had a recent diagnosis concerning yourself or a loved one, we welcome you, and we're sorry for what brought you here. News like this can be a lot to process, so we're glad we've found each other.

LCFA can help you find the resources you need, information that's written in plain, user-friendly language without technical jargon or complicated phrasing.

Explore Caregiver resources

- Plain-language guides to lung cancer subtypes, staging, and treatment
- Questions to bring to your oncologists, so you don't leave the office worried about what you forgot to ask
- Support for caregivers who are managing both logistics and grief
- Access to patient navigators who can help you find clinical trials and treatment options.

Start with whatever feels most important; any point is the right point. Give yourself grace, we'll be here.

A common thread connects us through this newsletter: the researchers, the donors, the patients, the caregivers, and the team behind this organization. Every one of us is working toward the same thing: a world where a lung cancer diagnosis comes with a real chance at a full life.

Giving Life - lcf.org/Donate

Thanks for being a part of how we get there.

With gratitude,

The LCFA Team