

Some people are willing to exploit this child.

Are you willing to help save her?

Of the 1.3 billion people living in extreme poverty worldwide, 70 percent are women. Many women feel forced to let themselves or their children be exploited in a desperate effort to feed and educate their children.

But small business opportunities save lives by empowering women to secure reliable ways to provide food, health care, and education for their children as well as contribute to their local economies.

Learn more about how you can save a girl from exploitation by helping an enterprising mother build a better future for her family.

Not every investment pays off. But there is one that will change lives—one that will look you in the eye with a big smile that says, "thank you."

An investment as small as $100 can provide a small business loan for a woman struggling to provide for her family.

From its 50 years of experience, World Vision knows that enterprising women will use their added income to provide for basic needs like food, health care, and education for their children. And World Vision gives the training necessary to help ensure small business success.
