Cover charge at Omnia Nightclub-

For general admission tickets, prices vary depending on which night of the week it is and whos performing.

On Omnia Thursdays and Omnia Sundays, the cover charge for men is thirty to forty dollars on average and twenty to thirty dollars for women.

Prices go up as the night goes on, and more people show up, though.

By late in the evening, your cover charge can range from forty to fifty dollars regardless of gender.

Omnia's cover charge on Tuesdays, Fridays, and Saturday's costs forty to fifty dollars for men, and thirty to forty for women. On these nights, getting in late if there is still room left costs can be as much as sixty dollars per person.

Attire for Omnia Nightclub-

All Las Vegas nightclubs have a very similar dress code. They know that this is Vegas, and you might not be spending the night at just one club. It sets a tone for the entire atmosphere of the strip. But the Omnia nightclub dress code sets the bar a bit higher than most.

Omnia's dress code is considered upscale fashionable. This means all men have to wear collared button-down shirts. No hats are allowed regardless of gender, no sandals for men, no steel-toed shoes or work boots, and no ripped or oversized clothing.

For women, Las Vegas dress standards tend to be a bit more flexible. As long as the outfit looks classy, you'll be fine. Just remember no flip flops, backless sandals, or athletic wear.

If you feel like you aren't sure, remember that Omnia reserves the right to make a dress code entry decision.

Omnia Drink Prices-

Drink prices at the Omnia nightclub fall slightly above the industry standard. Having said that, if you're on a budget, purchasing individual drinks for your night out may not be the best financial move. The reason for the higher prices on individual drinks isn't without good reason, though.

Nightclubs make money on alcohol sales, bottle service, table reservations, and cover charges. Considering the cost of paying for top performers, and the maintenance of Omnia's mind-blowing facilities, you are getting your money's worth.

With these factors in mind, drink prices can vary based on brands and availability. You can expect to pay between $12-$25 for mixed drinks and cocktails, and around $12-$15 for individual beers.

If you know you will be drinking beer all night, you can buy a six or twelve-pack for $60 and $120, respectively, to even out costs and avoid multiple trips and tips to the bar.

If you want to purchase a bottle without booking a table, prices range between $550 upwards of $9000.

Table reservations and bottle service at Omnia-

If you are interested in booking table reservations for bottle service at Omnia, you came to the right place. Making reservations ahead of time for your night can save you a lot of time and money. Not to mention that all tables reservations include VIP entry, so you won't have to wait in long lines at the door.

Your table reservations are also the only way to get seating in the club. All other tickets are for standing room only. Once you are seated at your private booth, your cocktail server will be tableside to mix your drinks and craft anything you make up at your table for you.

Booking tables reservations also means that your drink mixers such as juice and soda are complimentary and not added to your bill.

Some of the tables will have a higher minimum depending on location and performer. Multiple price options are available for the different spots around the club, with prices start at around fifteen hundred dollars and go up to about fifteen thousand.
