I'm Going to Disney World!

Jennifer A. Simmering
 Editor-in-Chief

Black Hawk College was the first community college to participate in Disney's College Intern Program twelve years ago. Since then, Bruce Storey, from Career Services in Building 1, has helped nearly 140 students make their way through to the 'Happiest Place on Earth'.

Each semester there is a short application period of about six weeks, which consists of an online application, an internet questionnaire, and a phone interview. Storey will walk the applicants through these first two steps. While he cannot sit with the applicant through the final step, he does prep them for it, knowing approximately what will be asked and how the student should act and respond during the phone interview.

The success rate for applicants to get in via Black Hawk College is higher than the national success rate for getting in, Storey maintains. Annually about 50,000 to 60,000 students apply for about 4,000 positions.

This semester, 14 BHC students applied to the Disney College Intern Program. Eight of those students will be going to Disney next semester.

Storey pointed out that the work there is very difficult, with interns working a good 40 hours per week. However, when not working, they can participate in any of the park venues for free, and can even have passes for family and friends. The program also offers free college classes while there. One of the best aspects of Disney training is that it looks fantastic on the resume. Students rarely have trouble finding a job when they have the Disney internship listed with their experience.

Another advantage of being a Disney College Intern is the opportunity to learn from one of the best companies in the world, as Storey puts it. He explained that it is a broad company, encompassing ESPN, ABCtv, and other entertainment organizations. In addition, only former college interns can go back and apply for the Professional Intern Program.

Does all of this sound too good to be true? Okay, there is a small catch. Students who go will delay graduation by a semester in order to go to Florida. But Storey exclaims, "It's so worth it!"

A personal fanatic of Disney, Storey has visited there 29 times, specifying that their above-and-beyond customer service keeps him going back.

"The funniest thing to do," he commented, "is to stand in the middle of Main Street and look confused. A cast member will be with you shortly." He explained that part of the training all Disney staff members receive, including the college interns, is to see a need and act on it.

Among their strict guidelines, Disney does not want interns with visible tattoos or piercings (girls can only have one piercing in each ear) or hair that has been colored. Other than

Lady Braves Rebuilding for success

Ben Bopes
 Staff Reporter

The beginning of a new season is always an exciting time for any team no matter the sport. The playing field is even and every program has the opportunity to become a championship team regardless of the past.

With a roster full of talent and an experienced coaching staff, there's plenty of reasons for the Lady Braves to be excited about the opportunity they have in front of them. But first, let's go back three seasons ago when excitement was very hard to come by for this program.

For a program who takes pride in their history of success, the 2012 and 2013 seasons were anything but exciting for the program. The Lady Braves managed to only win six games during the 2012 season, and unfortunately times would get even tougher the following season.

The Lady Braves began the 2013 season with only eight players on the roster, and eventually that number would drop to three players due to injuries and even illnesses. The Lady Braves had no choice but to forfeit six games in January and early February. The program would end the season with a 1-18 record, the one win resulted from a forfeit from Southeastern Community College for using an ineligible player during the Lady Braves season opener. Following two disappointing seasons, the program decided to part ways with Head Coach Karen Boyd, and so the rebuilding process began for the program.

Darren Bizarri, head coach of the men's basketball team, was named the interim coach for the Lady Braves while the program began their search for a new head coach. The program then hired Danielle Osterhaus to be the lead assistant coach for the 2014 season, which included coaching games and leading practices for the team.

Osterhaus, who played for the Lady Braves from 2001 to 2003, helped lead the program in the right direction as they finished the 2014 season with a 10-15 record. The improvements the program made in just one season helped Osterhaus earn the head coaching position, which was made official last February.

With only three players returning from last season, Osterhaus and her

Weeks of on-campus donations led by the League of Social Scientists, the Child Development Club, and the Student Leadership Council resulted in a presentation from SafePath Survivor Resources over the topic of domestic violence on October 30th.

When all was said and done, Black Hawk students were able to raise 326 totes to donate to SafePath, which has facilities in Davenport, Moline, and Muscatine.

Becky Lorentzen, the Community Relations Manager for Family Resources, and Melody Williams, a volunteer coordinator for SafePath Survivor Resources, represented the organization and accepted the bags with gratitude.

Gabbing with Grunt: What's this free education that you speak of?

Gayle Grundstrom
Staff Reporter

The time to start applying for our next semester of classes is upon us, and with that, trying to figure out how the heck we're going to pay for our education. While some students have scholarships and grants to support them, others may have to resort to loans, which at any age feels like lying on the ground and having someone shovel dirt on top of you.

A perk of Black Hawk College is that it is regarded as being more affordable than say a four-year university. However, what if in the future, you could attend any community college for free?

Sound like a lot of hoopla? Don't throw your bricks just yet.

Whether you like to pay attention to the current politics or not, the issue of affordable college came up during a past democratic debate. Bernie Sanders said that he was basically the man with the plan. Regardless of whether you side with the elephants or the donkeys, or you just don't give a turkey, affordable college is a topic that we all, as college students, should be paying attention to.

If we all day-dream for a moment that college could become free on a public university level, wouldn't we agree that the metaphorical falling anvil would disappear?

Jessica Tucker, an upcoming graduate in the field of Elementary Education, raved, "If college was free, my life would be greatly impacted. One thing that would change for me is my stress level. I work a lot to pay for my tuition, and I know a lot of people are going through the same thing I am, but I feel like I would be able to enjoy my work more if college was free rather than just focusing on paying the bills."

Logan Martens reasoned, "If college was free, I feel like I wouldn't necessarily be at BHC right now. I could have started at a four year university instead."

The range of opportunities for students if college was free would be vast.

Sanders was once quoted – again, I'm not swinging the pom-poms for team Bernster necessarily – saying, "In a global economy, when our young people are competing with workers from around the world, we have got to have the best educated workforce possible. And, that means that we have got to make college affordable."

Free tuition is not such an alien concept; Norway, Sweden, and other countries around the globe have already expanded on the concept.

Kelly Carlson, a BHC student striving for a degree in English Literature, affirmed, "I do believe free college is an achievable goal. Other countries have done it and they have some of the most stable economies. It's definitely a possibility."

Just how could this become a possibility? Sanders plan involves imposing a "tax of a fraction of a percent on Wall Street, taxing Wall Street speculators" to completely cover the cost.

Colten Parchert, a student at BHC, pondered, "The price tag to make this possible probably sounds pretty steep, but when you consider all the other things we spend money on, is relocating some of that money to give more people a chance at a college education such a bad idea?" Parchert continued, "I know it's something that I would want to be available for any kids that I might have down the road."

A change as drastic as free public college won't happen overnight. In fact, it's hard to say just when the right people are going to be able to figure out the best way to implement it. But as current college students, we know exactly what it's like to feel uneasy about signing up for your next semester of classes.

Too many students are graduating with loan debt that could take them decades to pay off; it doesn't matter if you're like Dave Ramsey with your money, the expense of education is becoming an epidemic.

In early October, the Chieftain staff attended training at the Illinois Community College Journalism Association held at Eastern Illinois University

Navigating election season Political advice from a political novice

Jennifer A. Simmering
Editor-in-Chief

A new President will be elected a year from now. If you are like me, the idea of performing your civic duty by voting leaves a knot in the pit of your stomach. Not because you don't want to be a good citizen, but because understanding the myriad of issues through the extensive candidate-to-candidate tongue-lashings can be a bit difficult to navigate through.

Such circumstances leaves citizens like you and me with limited options. Either we choose not to vote because we don't feel we can make a well-informed decision, we vote with our best guess hoping we are making a good choice, or we vote blindly, selecting candidates at random, hoping that the truly right person for the job will end up on top despite your ignorance.

None of these options are in our best interest, or that of our nation. With a year to prepare, hopefully these resources will help you learn what the real issues are so you can feel like you will truly make a difference when you vote.

First of all, you need to be registered to vote. Many times you will be given that option when you get your driver's license renewed. If you are not sure whether or not you are registered, you can go to www.elections.il.gov/VotingInformation/ RegistrationLookup.aspx. Here you will enter your first and last name followed by your zip code. If you are registered, a screen will come up with your information and it will also list your polling place. If you are not registered, this same website has an online voter registration application.

That handles the paperwork part of it. Now, there are two important election dates in 2016. The Primary Election will be on March 15, 2016. This is where candidates will be narrowed down by party. Currently, there are about 21 candidates vying for the presidential spot. This field will be greatly reduced leaving one candidate per political party.

Sadly, primary elections are often overlooked because it is not viewed with just importance. According to wisegeek.org, primary elections are even more important than the general election to come in November. "Many voters don't seem to realize that the primary is one of the most important phases of an election. This is when each vote counts the most, because it gives people the ability to decide who the best candidate is."

The second important election is the General Election that will be held November 8, 2016. This is when one party will win over all the others, ultimately naming the president-elect and other candidates currently up for office. Knowing the important dates is key, but how do you weed through the campaign ads, each striving to prove they are the best candidate?

It helps to first know what the political issues are. Information about the various issues can be found at www.presidential-election.com/Political\_Issues/. That alone, however, does not tell you where the candidates stand on those issues. It will help you learn the facts to determine what issues are important to you and help you in your next step – learning what side of the issue(s) each candidate stands on.

To find out who the candidates are, visit www.presidential-election.com/candidates/. The candidates are divided by party: Democrat, Republican, and Third Party Candidates.

Knowing the issues and the candidates are two very important steps when learning to navigate the election field. But now you need to connect these two things. What issues are important to the candidates? "On the Issues" is a website that will help you answer that question.

This may still seem a bit intimidating to the novice voter, but you have about five months before the Primary, and a year before the General Election. Make it a priority to educate yourself on the important issues so that you can vote with a good conscience.

The final event of the day was the first ever awards for "Best of Show"

Help someone learn English

Free Adult Education Program at Black Hawk College has high teaching quality

Ale Toniazzo

If you know some people from other countries, you can help them to study English at no cost if they qualify. The Adult Education Program at Black Hawk College helps more than 800 non-English speaking residents in a year's time.

The Academic ESL program at Black Hawk College offers developmental classes to non-native speakers who need to become proficient in English to start regular college programs. The difference between this and the Adult Education ESL Program, is that the second provides general English skills from basic to intermediate levels. Its' focus is preparing students to function in American society, to get enough language for a job, or acquire language for further training.

"People who don't know any English can start the program. People who know a few words in English can start the program. We have 10 different class levels and students need to enroll and take a brief test to determine their class level," said Ann O'Leary, ESL Coordinator.

Now you could be thinking: "Ok, my friend or neighbor needs English, but doesn't have money to pay for classes." It is important to know that BHC applies for Federal and State grant monies along with College support to fund this program. "All classes and materials are at no cost, but it is necessary that the student be a resident of the Black Hawk College District in Illinois," informed O'Leary.

While I was visiting the Adult Education ESL Program locations in the Rock Island and East Moline Centers, I was impressed how many students of different ages that the program benefits. Some people were from Africa, some people were from Latin America, and others were from Asia. I could see the enthusiasm to have this opportunity in their eyes.

"Most students are 18 years old and older and not in public school. We accept students with many ages. After testing, the students may be placed into existing classes if there is an opening," said Glenda Nicke, the Dean.

Today there are approximately 80 students waiting to be placed into their class. The good news is

I want to talk (gush) about pasta. Thank [insert deity of your choice] for pasta.

If you know how to make ramen using a stove top, you are 1/3 of the way there (finally using some of that math stuff they teach us).

Before I share the way of Americanized pasta, you need to ask yourself a few questions to see if you are qualified for this feat.

1. Can you boil water?
2. Can you throw pasta against a wall? (keep reading)

Yes? Yes. Good. So you can try different combinations of noodles, sauces, and toppings, but please do a little research before making a mess!

A great (easy for dummies) resource that has a plethora of knowledge on all things food is www.recipes.com. Below you will find a collection of different things you could try, as well as two simple (and yummy) recipes for different types of pasta.

Fun types of noodles to try: Elbow Macaroni, Bow tie, Rigatoni, Cavatappi, Angel Hair, Fettucine, Farfalline, Manicotti, or Penne

Suggestions for sauces: Tomato-Based Red Sauces, Alfredo Sauces, or Cheese Sauces

Yummy add-ins: Meats such as beef, pork, chicken, tuna, seafood, or steak

Vegetables such as broccoli, spinach, carrots, mushrooms, peas, peppers, onions, tomatoes, and/or zucchini

Other stuff: cheese.. so much cheese, garlic, different herbs and seasonings.

Beginners should start small. This is NOT a "go big or go home" situation, trust me!

Tip: an easy way to make sure your noodles are ready to eat is to take a noodle and throw it against the wall, I know it may sound crazy, but it works. A noodle that is finished will stick to the wall.

The great thing about pasta is that you can buy it in bulk, it reheats well, and stores easily.

In closing I want to say that I in noooooo (NO) way consider myself an excellent cook, I was chosen because my cooking skill besides probably being quantified as a negative, gives me the ability to identify with a lot of college students in the scavenging for food department as well as finding the types of foods we eat and recipes that are easy to make.

Easy Goulash

"Noodles in a mild tomato sauce with ground beef and cheese, an easy weeknight meal that's also great left over. I sometimes add frozen or thawed peas to sneak in some veggies. You can really use any kind of pasta."

(recipe by Molly Brook)

Ingredients

- 1 (16 ounce) package elbow macaroni
- 1 pound ground beef
- 1 (10.75 ounce) can tomato soup
- 1 (8 ounce) can tomato sauce
- 1/2 cup shredded Cheddar cheese

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees F (175 degrees C).
2. Bring a large pot of lightly salted water to a boil. Cook elbow macaroni in the boiling water, stirring occasionally, until cooked through but firm to the bite, 8 minutes; drain macaroni and return to pot.
3. Heat a large skillet over medium-high heat. Cook and stir beef in the hot skillet until browned and crumbly, 5 to 7 minutes.
4. Stir tomato soup and tomato sauce into the beef; pour into pot with macaroni and stir. Transfer macaroni mixture to a 1.5-quart baking dish; top with Cheddar cheese.
5. Bake in preheated oven until the cheese is melted, 10 to 15 minutes.

Iowa and St Louis' prospects are proving their caliber for the Quad City Mallards. Of the 30 goals scored for the Mallards so far, 28 have been scored by someone who attended an American Hockey League (AHL) or National Hockey League (NHL) Training Camp this summer. The other two goals were scored by Vladimir Nikiforov, who has past AHL-experience.

Of a 22 man roster, 18 players saw AHL Camp experience this summer, ten being rookies this season. The Mallards are affiliated with the Minnesota Wild, and therefore the Iowa Wild as well, but also have an unofficial agreement with the St Louis Blues. Zach Pochiro and Ryan Tesink were both assigned by the Blues from the Chicago Wolves, the AHL affiliate of the Blues. The Blues currently have no official ECHL affiliate according to the ECHL website, but their website lists the Alaska Aces as an affiliate.

Olivier Archambault is the top-scorer for the Mallards. He has 10 points in eight games, with four goals. Raphael Bussieres and Guillaume Gelinat are tied for second place with eight points each.

Gelinat, a defenseman, has played 11 games and has bolstered an otherwise lacking offense.

Tanner Eberle was assigned to the Mallards on Oct. 23. The next day, he was on the ice at the iWireless Center. Although he was held off the scoresheet in his Mallard debut, the following night he scored two goals against Wichita, assisting on another.

During the roadtrip from Oct. 27 through Oct. 31, the Mallards only earned one point out of a possible six. They never led throughout the three games.

Coach Terry Ruskowski has said several times that he is ready to begin cutting the roster, trading or cutting players who are not playing the systems or not working hard enough. Much as last season, the Mallards are struggling with putting out consistent effort.

After the game against the Indy Fuel on Nov 7 Coach Ruskowski said, "Our defense should be in front of their forwards. So what did our defense do? We played behind them all night. That's frustrating because that's not how we're supposed to do it."

Overall, there have been bright spots of the young talent assigned to the Mallards, but as a collective team there is a dark spot in the failure to play the systems they are taught by Coach Ruskowski.

coaching staff spent the offseason rebuilding the programs roster. Osterhaus made an emphasis this offseason on recruiting players from or relatively close to the Quad City area and who are outstanding students as well.

Ten out of the eleven players on this year's roster are either from or within an hour drive of the QC area. The idea behind recruiting locally is so the players have a strong support system around them not only from within the team but also from their family and friends.

"We have parents traveling with us two to three hours for our jamborees to see their ladies play which is an awesome thing to have for the program," Coach Osterhaus said.

The Lady Braves are a relatively young team this year with six freshman on the roster and only three returning players from last season. One of the returning players, sophomore Chramaine Clark, was with the program last year, but missed the entire season with an ACL tear. With so many new faces, the players and the coaching staff have been working all offseason learning to play as a unit. Coach Osterhaus is confident that once the team becomes accustomed playing with one another they have the athletes to be a 20 plus win program this season.

The Lady Braves will be led by their three captains, who were elected by the coaching staff, Erin Morrissey, Rayven Morrow, and Libby Frye.

Erin Morrissey is a sophomore transfer from the University of Dubuque. For Coach Osterhaus, Morrissey was an easy choice for captain because she has the persona of being a leader, she does every drill first, and every player looks to her for answers.

While attending Dubuque University, Morrissey received a phone call from Zoe Kelso, who played for the Lady Braves last season.

Kelso explained to Morrissey that the program was turning around and Coach Osterhaus was doing a great job coaching and recruiting for the program. The next thing Morrissey knew she was talking to coach and was then offered a scholarship to play for the Lady Braves.

Morrissey takes a lot of pride in being one of the captains on the team. She enjoys having the type of presence on the court where her teammates will follow her lead, and she embraces the opportunity to help them as well. The 6-foot center also takes pride in protecting the post, which she calls "my paint".

"That's my paint and I'm not going to let anyone come in and push me around," Morrissey said.

Unfortunately, Morrissey is not eligible to play until January due to not having enough transfer credits.

In the meantime, Morrissey plans on encouraging and helping her teammates from the sideline anyway she can, as well as continuing to work hard in practice to make sure she's ready for her return in January.

The Lady Braves started the season with an 82-68 victory over Morton College. Hannah Ford led the team with 27 points and Rayven Morrow was second in scoring with 22 points.

The Lady Braves then improved to 2-0 defeating Lincoln College on the road 65-59. Ford and Morrow led in scoring for the second straight game as Morrow put up 18 points and Ford contributed 15 points.

The team suffered their first loss of the season last Saturday night against Lincoln Land College as they were defeated 65-61.

The next test for the Lady Braves will be on the road against Rock Valley College, before the team competes in the Carl Sandburg College Classic this upcoming weekend.

Fantasy sports - Chieftain style

Ben Bopes
Staff Reporter

Football season is here! Now for those of us students who can't get enough fantasy football, here are some pointers.

Who to start: Although there have been a lot of key injuries this season, there are still some diamonds in the rough to be picked up and started for your fantasy team. Whether you are playing draft kings on fan duel, or just a league on nfl.com, we will offer some fantasy advice for your teams. Here is a top 7 list of who to start and, top 5 who to sit as the season progresses.

1 Antonio Brown. Brown has been a solid receiver for the Pittsburgh Steelers this season and he is a lock to start every week for your fantasy team. Brown has been racking up the fantasy points and he stays healthy! Knock on wood, keep an eye on his injury status throughout the season, but he is a sure pick on my fantasy team as he brings in the big number week in and week out. His quarterback however, is a different story.

2 Tyrod Taylor. Who? That's right Tyrod Taylor is the quarterback for the Buffalo Bills and his numbers have been off the charts this season for an unknown. Taylor is looking like a young Phenom and he is a lock to start at quarterback.

3. Derek Carr. That's right. Derek is the younger brother of NFL quarterback David Carr, both brothers are quarterbacks, but it is Derek who is running the fantasy show this season. Derek starts for the Oakland Raiders and I would start him almost every week, especially with quarterbacks dropping like flies due to injuries this season.

4. Karlos Williams, a rookie sensation from the Buffalo Bills is getting a lot of carries as a running back this season and he is making those carries count. Williams is getting carries due to an injury to LeSean McCoy. Pick up and start Williams and he should give you about 20 points or so week in and week out if he can stay healthy.

5. Thomas Rawls, this young Seattle rookie running back has been taking over for Marshawn Lynch who has been suffering from nagging injuries as well. Just plug Rawls in for Lynch as a substitute for a high powered offense that can score some points.

6. A surprise here, but never the less is a 30 year old starter named Chris Johnson. I have had Chris Johnson on my fantasy squad for 3 years and he was the definition of a fantasy player. Fantasy owners, such as myself absolutely love Chris Johnson.

He puts up fantasy points like it is an arcade video game. Although his numbers have declined over the years he is still a solid starter. Start him on a consistent basis.

7. Speaking of 30 year olds. Larry Fitzgerald is still going strong, the former ball boy for the Minnesota Vikings is one of the most underrated superstars in the game today. He puts up solid numbers week in and week out. Pay attention to his injury status, it's a long season and the injury bug has already plagued some players seasons.

Who to Sit: Quarterbacks are dropping like flies, and here are some players that need to be on your reserve list as the young season rolls on.

1. Andre Johnson The long time Houston Texans receiver is not getting any targets this season. His career could be revived, but so far not a lot happening with this superstar. Sit him in favor of some younger players.

2. Roddy White Sit him as he is also not getting any targets this season. Fellow receiver Julio Jones should be picked up in place of Roddy White as he gets the points of an A plus player.

3. Rob Gronkowski is lock to start every week. He brings in points like banks collect interest. Start him for a fruitful fantasy season.

4. Tom Brady is the man providing Gronkowski with the points as he is the ultimate quarterback.

5. Owen Daniels is on the rise this season. He is getting the targets he needs and will bring home the bacon for his teams as far as fantasy points are concerned.

WHICH HAT FITS YOU?

Fall fest full of fright

and fear factor fun

The main attraction of the Fall Fest this year was the Fear Factor Competition sponsored by SLC. There were four events in the Fear Factor competition: Chubby Bunny, Egg Roulette, Bug Eating, and Karaoke. Six teams participated: African American Womens Association, African American Mens Association, SLC, Association of Latin American Students, Double Feature Film Club, and Counseling.

The first challenge was the Chubby Bunny. This dare required the participants to place one giant marshmallow in their mouth after each successful repetition of the phrase "Chubby Bunny." The SLC was eliminated.

The next challenge was Egg Roulette. This was a three round competition, a new player each round.

Dean Luis Marino stepped in for the Counseling Center for the Bug Eating Contest. The bugs were chocolate covered crickets. Dean Marino won the competition, the Double Feature Film Club coming in second. Those two teams then competed in a Karaoke Challenge.

The Counseling Center performed first, singing Britney

Spears' "Hit me baby one more time". DFFC then performed Backstreet's Back.

The Double Feature Film Club won a free catered meeting for winning through the "applause-meter".

that, they seek any applicant who is friendly and outgoing, is personable, and of course, loves Disney.

Former Disney interns from Black Hawk report that their favorite experience is getting to meet people from literally all over the world. Their cultural horizon is broadened, and as Storey puts it, "They all get to make magic!"

Hailey Turner is a current student at Black Hawk College. She had never been to Disney World before, so when she saw the posters around campus about the Disney Intern program, she made her way to Career Services to talk about the opportunity. She applied on a whim, was accepted, and spent last semester at Disney working in quick service, or in other words, fast food. "It's hard work," remarked Hailey, "but the guest experience is like nothing you find anywhere else." She recommends the Disney Intern Program for everyone, commenting that the training revolves entirely around the guests. "You don't get training like that at any other job around here."

Hailey enjoyed her experience so much that she applied again and is among the eight BHC students going down there in January.

The application period for next semester is already closed, however, be ready in January to apply for the following semester. Mr. Storey encourages students to get in and apply early rather than late to ensure the likelihood of securing a spot at the "Happiest Place on Earth".

an emergency crisis line 24/7 to housing services for immediate shelter.

For students who were able to attend the lecture, it's no cliché that we all learned something new that day. Some of the statistics were immensely alarming; for instance, one out of every four U.S. women has been assaulted by their intimate partner.

Lorentzen and Williams also revealed "domestic violence related police calls constitute the single largest category of calls received. A woman is battered every nine seconds."

What the presentation did not touch on was how often men were abused in the relationship. However, regardless of gender, the types of abuse that could occur are not only physical, sexual, or verbal. Williams informed that abuse could also come in forms of neglect, stalking, financial/economic, emotional or even spiritual.

Although the tote drive is over, there are still opportunities available if you would like to make a bigger difference in the life of someone who is battling abuse. More information can be found at www.famres.org or you could contact Becky Lorentzen at 563-468-2140 to get involved.

'The Intern' delights with knowledge for new generations

To open the door for her or not open the door, that is the question. Robert De Niro is Ben Whittaker, an over-eager senior intern at an on-line fashion company. Jules Ostin, portrayed by Anne Hathaway, is the founder of the company and Whittaker's new boss, but Whittaker is more like the male equivalent of a fairy god-mother than just a new intern.

He puts on his suit and tie every morning, grabs his "vintage" briefcase, and the magic begins.

In multiple instances, Whittaker subtly proves that sometimes the right way is not the easiest one. It's literally like he's channeling his metaphorical 'Grandmother Willow.' Or maybe it's just a wise, elderly person trait.

Regardless, in a world where women can be the bread-winners of the family and all men have an adorable puppy-dog/ Ed Sheeran-ish façade, personal relationships can become severely misconstrued simply by miscommunication.

In one scene, Whittaker is asked for dating advice from his co-worker Jason, played by Adam DeVine (the guy who was Fat Amy's "secret" fling in the Pitch Perfect movies). Jason just couldn't understand why the girl he liked consistently side-stepped his efforts to apologize to her.

Hadn't he done all he could by texting her repeatedly, and even emailing her an extensively thought out letter of remorse, complete with one of the crying emojis? Doesn't it make it sound more convincing when instead of simply typing "I'm Sorry" in the subject line of an email he writes "I'm soooooorrrrrryy"?

Whittaker's ingenious dating tip: PHYSICALLY approach and talk to the girl.

Jules Ostin hadn't expected her knight in shining armor to be a 70 year old man – one who used his immaculate organization skills to bring a calm, orderly perspective to her life.

Throughout the film, Ostin constantly has her hands full trying to balance her life between being the head of a company and a devoted mother and wife, but she eventually raises the question: "How in one generation have guys gone from Jack Nicholson and Harrison Ford to... (looks perplexed at young men in front of her)."

However, there probably weren't many men back then that would be as gung-ho to entertain their daughter by playing "Ariel," all while their wife was off at work all day. Mr. Ostin was definitely a keeper, in the long run. I was a fan.

I don't necessarily agree that there is a whole lot wrong with today's new generation of twenty-somethings, but certain customs have definitely evolved from Whittaker's good ole days -- within the last fifty years.

People have gradually become more accepting of each other's differences. We're more connected with others than ever before, and yet our fairy god-intern questions: "Why doesn't anybody tuck anything in anymore?"
