

{ EAT }

So Long, Ceviche

{ By Laurie Budgar }

Ceviche has long held sway as Lima, Peru's, culinary star. But tiradito is making a splash as the city's hipper raw-fish dish. Paper-thin slices of seafood come topped with either a creamy yellow aji or red rocoto pepper sauce that balances out the citrusy, onion-free marinade. Try this Peruvian-Asian fusion fare at any of these spots in Lima's Miraflores district.

Sense

This newish, ultramodern restaurant is making waves with its red snapper tiradito. The strips of fish — sliced so thin, they're nearly translucent — are topped with a sauce made from granadilla (a type of passion fruit) and accompanied by a watercress salad. Francisco de Paula Camino 330, 011-51-1-444-0116, www.sense.com.pe

La Cocina de Dario

Locals love this eatery, located across from the Indian Market, for its simplicity. The Tiradito al Dario features flounder "cooked" with a house marinade and served with olive oil and capers. Petit Thouars 5390, 011-51-1-242-6818, www.lacocinadedario.kakurezato.com

Pescados Capitales V

A bit upscale, this cevicheria tempts diners with its breezy, thatched-roof outdoor seating. Adding even more allure, many items on the menu are named after a sin — or a virtue. Ask for the Templanza (literally, "temperance") and you'll get tuna tiradito soaked in a blend of orange juice, honey, olive oil and oyster sauce. Fresh asparagus spears and mushrooms complete the dish. So much for self-control. La Mar 1337, 011-51-1-421-8808, www.pescadoscapitales.com

tripping

BOOKMARK
THIS

Launched in 2009, TRIPPING.COM was created to connect travelers and hosts for homestays around the world. Now, perhaps to assuage anxiety about staying with total strangers, the company has introduced Networks — groups that link Tripping users via shared interests or experiences. A Network can unite anyone from Yale grads to yoga enthusiasts, ensuring that you can find a Tripper with whom you share at least one commonality before you crash on his or her couch.

— Ryan Jones

Sole ceviche