All-aluminum construction stands up to rough back roads, while a standard extruded aluminum floor and swivel D tie downs keep your rides secure during transportation. What really makes the 4926 stand out, though, are the options. A v-nose front ramp gives you more convenience when loading and unloading, and a workbench with overhead cabinets gives you all the space you need to make repairs. If you want to stay out overnight, the front slideout with living quarters provides you with a comfy place to sleep that can include a TV and a full kitchen. Other options include airliner track or aluminum A track for a better range of options when securing your toys. Interior LED strip lighting or fluorescent lights ensure you won't be stumbling around in the dark. With your 4926, you've got one of the best support systems for snowmobilers behind you—and it will haul a lot of other things in the off season! View Product >	Featherlite	Login

Trailer Hitches

Trailer Hitches

Trailer hitches join a towing vehicle with a trailer to ensure a safe connection between the two for transport. Trailer hitches come in all sizes and shapes for a variety of applications. Trailer hitches are classified as either weight-carrying or weight-distributing.

Weight-carrying hitches (such as a bumper pull) are recommended for use when the trailer weight (including cargo) is 5000 lbs. or less. Make sure the tow vehicle is rated by the manufacturer to accommodate that load. The tongue weight is carried directly on the rear of the tow vehicle and on the hitch. You can find your vehicle's tow rating online at www.campinglife.com or download a listing of tow ratings at www.trailerlife.com.

Use weight-distributing hitches for heavier loads. These hitches redistribute the tongue weight throughout the frame of the tow vehicle. The result is that the trailer's weight is distributed among the trailer axles and the front and rear axles on the tow vehicle. Ask about weight distribution hitches if you intend to tow using a "bumper" type hitch or hitch receiver.

Fifth wheels and goosenecks are two weight-distributing hitches used most often with pickup trucks. The weight of the trailer is carried directly over the rear axle with the hitch mounted in the truck's bed.

A fifth wheel hitch is used for larger trailers and is a small version of the type of hitch used on semi trucks. A gooseneck coupler attaches to a tow ball that usually is mounted in the bed of a pickup truck. Underneath the bed are support rails that are bolted or welded into place.

A frame-mounted hitch is one where the hitch is attached to the frame of the tow vehicle. This gives more stability to a bumper pull type of hitch.

Before every trip, check the tow ball and coupler to ensure they are the same size and that all bolts are securely tightened. Also, make sure the latching mechanism is locked in place.

For conventional smaller trailers known as bumper pull, there are two different kinds of frame mounted or bumper mounted trailer hitches to choose from: weight-distributing and weight-carrying. Fifth-wheel trailers can use two completely different kinds of trailer hitches, but they are beyond the scope of this article.

A weight-distributing trailer hitch is made of spring bars that connect to the ball mount and the trailer frame. This is done so that the trailer hitch and trailer axle's weights are distributed properly amongst themselves and with each other. When correctly used, a weight-distributing trailer hitch keeps the towing vehicle and the pulled trailer level once the full weight of the trailer has been placed on the ball mount. Because a weight-distributing trailer hitch can be somewhat unstable (especially when turning corners), sway control devices are often used.

Help ?

Alternatively, a weight-carrying trailer hitch bears all of its weight on the ball mount (or the ball itself if a ball mount is not used). If the weight of the trailer hitch is sizeable, the rear of the tow vehicle will initially face downward, but as the towing vehicle is weighted down, the front of the towing vehicle will rise. Because this may result in diminished front-brake efficiency and generally poor towing vehicle handling, weight-carrying trailer hitches are rated for lightweight towing only. Like weight-distributing trailer hitches, sway-control devices can be used with weight-carrying trailer hitches, depending upon what exactly is being towed.

Trailer hitch Classifications

Conventional trailer hitches are manufacturer-rated according to the highest weight they are able to pull. The highest weight calculation includes having the trailer's freshwater tank full, the propane tank and/or cylinders full, and all necessary items loaded. The trailer hitch ratings are as follows:

- Class I Trailer hitches: up to two thousand pounds.
- Class II Trailer hitches: up to three thousand, five hundred pounds.
- Class III Trailer hitches: can be either weight-carrying or weight-distributing and are rated for up to five thousand pounds.
- Class IV Trailer hitches: includes both weight-distributing and fifth-wheel trailer hitches and are rated for trailers between five thousand and ten thousand pounds.
- Beyond Class IV Trailer hitches: greater than ten thousand pounds.

Conventional Trailer hitch Hardware

- Ball Mounts

Lightweight trailer hitch loads use ball mount shanks made of square steel tubing, whereas heavy trailer hitch loads require a solid shank. In both cases, the shank has a hole punched through it that lines up with holes on opposite sides of the receiver. When the hole in the shank is lined up with the holes in the receiver, a hitch pin is inserted and held in place by a clip or lock. The ball mount attaches to the end of the shank. Some ball mounts adjust to accommodate different coupler heights and permit fine tuning of the trailer hitch, which in turn improves towing performance. Once the ball mount has been adjusted and set up, it should never require changing or retuning unless it is used with a different towing trailer or towing vehicle.
- The Ball

Balls are installed on the ball mount. Balls are available in sizes ranging from 1 7/8 inches to 2 5/16 inches, and have a variety of risers that raise the ball above the ball mount for proper positioning. Balls are rated for loads ranging from two thousand to ten thousand pounds. Make sure that the ball used is rated equal to or greater than the gross vehicle weight rating (GVWR) of the trailer.

A conventional trailer hitch platform is attached under the bottom of the towing vehicle. The very back of the platform is where the receiver is housed. The receiver is where a section of reinforced square tubing is placed into the shank of the ball mount.

1. Ball Mounts

Lightweight trailer hitch loads use ball mount shanks made of square steel tubing, whereas heavy trailer hitch loads require a solid shank. In both cases, the shank has a hole punched through it that lines up with holes on opposite sides of the receiver. When the hole in the shank is lined up with the holes in the receiver, a hitch pin is inserted and held in place by a clip or lock. The ball mount attaches to the end of the shank. Some ball mounts adjust to accommodate different coupler heights and permit fine tuning of the trailer hitch, which in turn improves towing performance. Once the ball mount has been adjusted and set up, it should never require changing or retuning unless it is used with a different towing trailer or towing vehicle.

2. The Ball

Balls are installed on the ball mount. Balls are available in sizes ranging from 1 7/8 inches to 2 5/16 inches, and have a variety of risers that raise the ball above the ball mount for proper positioning. Balls are rated for loads ranging from two thousand to ten thousand pounds. Make sure that the ball used is rated equal to or greater than the gross vehicle weight rating (GVWR) of the trailer.

3. Spring Bars

Spring bars are used with weight-distributing trailer hitches to spread the trailer hitch weight among the trailer and tow vehicle axles. Spring bars are rated in various weight capacities because the proper ones must be used to allow the load-distributing system to work. Generally speaking, use a spring bar that is rated up to two hundred and fifty pounds more than the actual trailer's trailer hitch weight to be safe.

4. Safety Chains

Safety chains and hooks (or other attaching devices) are only used safely with trailer hitches when they are rated higher than the GVWR of the trailer. The chains are installed properly if they run from the A-frame to a series of loops fastened securely to the trailer hitch receiver, are loose enough to allow sharp cornering but tight enough to prevent dragging.

When attached correctly, trailer hitch safety chains cross under the coupler so that if the trailer were disengage, the A-frame would still be propped up above the round in the framework of the crossed chains.

Trailer Insurance

TRAILER INSURANCE:

Do you need Trailer Insurance?

Basic Towing Liability is Usually Covered under Auto Insurance Policies

For some trailer owners, trailer insurance is a rip-off. Under almost all auto insurance policies, towing insurance coverage is included. Most but not all liability exposure for trailers occurs when a trailer is in tow. In other words, you don't usually need to buy towing insurance. The auto insurance or motor home insurance carried on the towing vehicle provides towing insurance.

Nonetheless, there are numerous instances in which separate trailer insurance is a prudent investment. Theft, vandalism, fire, storm damage flooding etcetera is probably not covered under your auto insurance policy. It may be covered under your homeowner's policy, particularly if you store the trailer at your residence. But be safe, and look at your insurance policy.

Is your trailer expensive to replace? How about its contents? Do you store or have installed expensive equipment or other items in the trailer? Your auto and homeowner's insurance policies probably do not cover property damage or loss to these items.

Purchasing Trailer Insurance

There are no cargo trailer insurance specialists. You must purchase trailer insurance from an RV insurance company or an automobile insurance company. For expensive trailers—or less expensive trailers that are used to store valuable equipment or other property, separate trailer insurance coverage may be appropriate ...Review the following insurance coverages and see if you think you need them:

Liability Coverage. Towing insurance liability is usually covered under your auto insurance. A separate towing insurance policy is usually not necessary for covering towing liability.

Trailer Property Contents Insurance. Do you need Trailer Insurance replacing appliances, electronics, generators, and other equipment at replacement value? Otherwise, you will be paid depreciated value.

Roadside Assistance. This may not seem necessary until you are faced with a large trailer disabled on the side of the road.

Contents. Cargo trailers carry expensive cargo. Make sure your contents coverage is high enough to cover expensive cargo as contents.

Contents. Cargo trailers carry expensive cargo. Make sure your contents coverage is high enough to cover expensive cargo as contents.

Non Towing Accidents: Protection against theft, vandalism, windstorm, hail, lightning, fire and explosion. Your auto insurance and homeowners insurance will probably not cover these occurrences.

Towing Insurance for breakdown. If a trailer becomes disabled on the side of the road—either because the tow vehicle or the trailer becomes inoperable, the expenses of finding a tow company who will tow a large trailer could be much more than a normal automobile tow.

Personal Effects Coverage. Are your personal belongings covered? Trailer Insurance policies cover theft from your trailer. If you pack your belongings in the trailer and they are stolen, they will probably not be covered under your auto insurance policy. Think about that the next time you put the luggage in the trailer and not in the trunk!

Total Loss Replacement Coverage. This optional coverage for some Trailer insurance policies pays to replace your trailer if it is damaged beyond repair. You receive another unit of the same kind and quality. No depreciation!

Outstanding Loan Balance Coverage. Under most trailer insurance policies, an expensive trailer is protected for its actual cash value, a claim settlement for a total loss sometimes isn't enough to pay off an outstanding loan.

Mexico Coverage. Going across the border? Add this optional coverage to your trailer insurance policy for physical damage protection while in Mexico .

Anti-Theft Measures To Keep Your Trailer Safe and Your Insurance Rates Down

Keeping your trailer safe, secure and parked where it should be is a growing concern among trailer owners of late. Cargo trailers, boat trailers, horse trailers, and pretty much any other kind of trailer you can think of are susceptible to theft as well.

When you think about it, a trailer is a fairly simple piece of machinery to steal. All a thief has to do is back up to the trailer in question, hook up his hitch and drive away. Which leads trailer owners to ask, "What can I do to keep my trailer safe and secure?"

The first thing a trailer owner can do is put themselves into the criminal mind set. If you can think about what a potential thief might need or do to steal your trailer, you can come up with methods to kybosh their efforts.

Thieves want something quick and easy to steal; if they cannot get in and out with what they want right away, they'll go looking for an easier target. Think about it: if your trailer is parked next to one that has alarms and security measures installed on it, which do you think the thieves would target?

Unfortunately, a good thief can steal pretty much anything with the right tools, time and knowledge. But if you can make your trailer look less appealing to thieves, you've won a good portion of the battle. This is why we recommend having anti-theft devices installed on every trailer you own.

Conventional Coupler Locks

The marketplace has created many locking mechanisms to ensure our example above doesn't happen to you. Conventional coupler locks come in different shapes and sizes and generally work by placing a ball or similar device into the coupler. Some of these locks have built-in machinery that covers the ball socket, locks it into place and doesn't allow the coupler to be lowered onto the hitch ball.

Coupler Hatch Locks

These anti-theft devices for your trailer work by not allowing the latching apparatus to open. Coupler hatch locks have a shank that fits through the hole in the coupler's latching handle and then a lock that attaches the entire package together. This option also averts thieves from lifting your trailer right off the back of your tow vehicle when parked out and about, since it makes the coupler unable to disengage from the hitch ball.

Locking Receiver Pins

Locking pins have been developed to ensure that conventional hitch balls don't go missing. Since ball mounts are easily removed by pulling the spring clip out, a locking receiver pin will secure the ball into the receiver tube with

Locking Receiver Pins

Locking pins have been developed to ensure that conventional hitch balls don't go missing. Since ball mounts are easily removed by pulling the spring clip out, a locking receiver pin will secure the ball into the receiver tube with a key lock.

Immobilize the Wheels

Even with a lock on the coupler, sometimes thieves will merely ignore the hitch completely and chain the trailer to their towing vehicle and drive it away.

By removing of one or more of your wheels, you are forcing thieves to replace the tire with one of their own in order to move it, which of course slows down their response time. To really thwart a wannabe burglar, mount locking lug nuts on the empty lug bolts. And if you have a spare tire for the trailer, remove it and place it somewhere out of sight and secured until you travel.

If jacking up your trailer repeatedly to remove a wheel or two is too much trouble, there are a number of wheel locking devices currently on the market that not only stop the use of the wheel, but are almost impossible to remove without a key.

Less Invasive But Still Sneaky Security Measures

If we go back to the original example used in this article, where many thieves won't spend the time needed to steal an trailer that is more pain than gain, we can come up with a couple of more ingenious ways of keeping your trailer safe.

When parking your trailer, make sure it is in a well-lit area with lots of people around. The more strangers that may see someone fooling around with your trailer, the better. If this isn't possible, park it instead behind another vehicle so that it cannot be easily hitched to and driven away.

If The Worst Happens

Unfortunately, you can go to a lot of trouble to make your trailer less desirable to thieves, and yet it may still get stolen. If the worst happens, call the police immediately and report what happened. Give them all of the necessary information (serial numbers, identifying marks and decals and equipment add-ons). Then, call your insurance company and let them know what has happened as well. Send them receipt copies for all of the anti-theft devices you've installed, and inform them of your call to the police as well.

If you take heed, think like a criminal and install some anti-theft devices on your trailer, you'll be taking greater security measures to ensure the safety of your property - which can only help in the long run.

FAQ

Q: Do I have to wait for a sales person to call me after I have requested more information?

A: No, not at all. Usually a sales person will contact you within 48 hours of your submitting for additional information, however, please feel free to call our toll free number, 1-888-400-2414, and speak to a sales person right away.

Q: I want a trailer, but can I have it delivered?

A: YES! Your InternetTrailer.com sales rep can arrange to have your trailer delivered to you. We use a 3rd party shipping company, and your trailer will need to be paid in full before the trailer is shipped out to you. Additionally, some shippers will require direct payment from you, the customer, for the delivery fee. Please check with your sales person for details.

Q: Do I have to pay sales tax?

A: InternetTrailer.com does not collect sales tax on the purchase of your trailer. Taxes on trailers vary state to state, your state may charge tax when you register your trailer, or your dealer may collect these taxes when you pick up your trailer. Please check with your dealer, for tax information.

Q: What's a Sandpad?

A: A sandpad is a piece of metal that sits on the end of the tongue jack, and helps prevent the tongue jack from sinking into the asphalt.

Q: Is financing available?

A: Yes, we have several financing options available, please call our toll free number and speak to a salesperson for details.

Q: I have a warranty issue, who do I call?

A: Call the dealership where you picked up your trailer from. They will be able to assist you with any warranty needs you may have.
